SENATE BARS ALIEN RUSH

FRENCH POLICY ON RHINE FANS GERMAN HATRED

Plots Bring Dreams of Revenge.

Embers of the great war still smoulder in the occupied districts and liberated regions near the Rhine. Fresh crops of hatred are being cultivated between victors and vanquished. Startling reports of conditions of life and of international intrigue have come out from Alsace-Lorraine, now rejoined to France; from the Saar, nominally under the league of nations rule; from the Rhinelands, partially under French occupation. German charges, however, have been met with contradiction and recrimination, and the truth has been hard to reach, because the whole region is still under military rule and rigid censorship.

With the purpose of getting at the facts, irrespective of sentiment, an American journalist of high reputation has made, under instruction by the New York World, a careful inquiry on the spot, and his conclusions are here set forth.

It is believed his work is accurate because of confidence in his good faith and ability.

The articles have been submitted in synopsis to the French foreign office for such answer as the Quai d'Orsay cared to make.

Besides the present dispatch, which deals with general conditions in the Rhineland, other articles, which will appear daily this week, will cover these subjects:

Dissatisfaction in Alsace and Lorraine with the French.

How the Versailles treaty is disregarded in the Saar valley.

Why France wants control of the Ruhr.

Peculiar methods of Belgium in annexing territory.

[By a Special Correspondent.]

[Copyright: 1921: by the Press Publishing Company (The New York World.)]

LONDON, Feb. 1.—Instructed to report on the political and economic conditions obtaining in that part of Germany under French military occupation, a correspondent has visited the French area and attempts in this story to describe conditions there.

Only that part of the Rhineland is here dealt with at length which the French are holding temporarily, under the treaty, to insure that the Germans carry out the peace terms. Alsace-Lorraine has been definitely annexed to France, and the Saar region, now occupied by the French, is a plebiscite area whose future allegiance will be decided by ballot in fifteen years. Other parts of the Rhineland are occupied by Belgian, American, and English troops.

How Rhineland Is Held.

Before going into details some facts will be given to indicate the general position on the Rhine. There are about 10,000 Belgian troops in the Belgian area, in the north; below them 13,000 British hold the Cologne bridgehead, and linking up with the British, to the south between 14,000 and 16,000 Americans prolong the line along the Rhine.

The French area, the subject of this story, begins about half way between Coblenz, the American headquarters, and Mainz, the headquarters of the French army of occupation and of the interallied Rhineland high commission. It extends through the Bavarian palatinate, including all the German land on the left bank of the river as far as the frontiers of the Saar plebiscite area and Alsace.

The German population which is living under the control of the allied armies, excluding the 700,000 Germans in the Saar, amounted on May 31, 1919, to 8,247,200, or 9.2 per cent of the population of the German reich.

French Force Numbers 85,000.

The occupying armies other than the French number about 30,000 men, taken together. The French have in the zone 1,550 officers and 85,000 men. This figure is approximate, as details of the French military establishment are not made public, for military reasons. Of these French troops, something less than 20,000 are North African "colored" soldiers.

They must be distinguished from the pure Negroes, the so-called "Senegalese," from Senegal and other tropical colonies, of whom some thousands were on the Rhine until this autumn, when they were removed to the south of France. The alleged outrages of these black and "colored" troops will be dealt with in another story.

The correspondent found that the economic life of the occupied areas has suffered seriously under the restrictions necessarily imposed, but all accounts agree that in the American and British areas, outside the scope of the

ANGELL CHOSEN YALE PRESIDENT; SETS PRECEDENT

First Time Son of "Old Eli" Is Not Picked.

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—James Rowland Angell, director of the Carnegie foundation and formerly dean of the University of Chicago, was this afternoon elected president of Yale, to succeed Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, who resigned thirteen months ago. The vote of the Yale corporation was announced as "unanimous."

Never before has Yale gone outside its own faculty for a president, and the decision is interpreted as a move to "inject new blood into the position."

Yale, on the other hand, has given so many executive heads to other colleges that she has been referred to as the "mother of presidents."

Formal Announcement.

The formal announcement of the election confirmed the understanding among Yale men that the election was made last Saturday. Withholding of an announcemetn then was due to the desire to reach Dr. Angell to ascertain if he would accept. Today, after the selection had been confirmed by Dr. Angell's acceptance, the fact was communicated to the university council and then announced to the public.

The announcement says in part:

"Yale is a national university, and the corporation has endeavored to choose for its head the ablest educational administrator available in the United States, irrespective of the college of his graduation or the place of his residence."

Eighty Names Considered.

The Yale corporation adds:

"Some eighty names have been under careful consideration. The corporation believes that no one in America combines the breadth of educational experience and business ability, high public service, and spiritual ideals more completely than Dr. Angell."

Until the election of Prof. Arthur T. Hadley, twenty-one years ago, all presidents had been Congregational clergymen, and it was considered a radical move to overlook the ministry and select a distinguished professor of political economy for the office.

Exchange Professor at Sorbonne.

Dr. Angell's specialty, psychology, in which he held a high governmental position during the world war, as exchange professor at the Sorbonne in Paris, is regarded as indicative of the changed attitude of college thinkers toward the duties of the position.

Dr. Angell is a son of the late president of the University of Michigan, and himself an Ann Arbor graduate, class of '90. He has been offered more university presidencies than any one else, except possibly former President William Howard Taft.

President Elect Angell is in the south at the present time and will be unable to greet the alumni next Tuesday at the university alumni day.

Praised by Predecessor.

President Hadley, after the election of his successor had been announced, made this statement:

"Dr. Angell has a combination of qualities which fit him admirably for the headship of Yale. He is a teacher with large administrative experience and a western man thoroughly familiar with eastern ideals. Above all, he is a man whose character, scholarship, and public spirit are in line with the highest traditions of the office."

Secretary Anson Phelps Stokes, who will retire with President Hadley, said:

"The election of Dr. Angell will give the university the services of one of the most experienced men in America in the field of educational leadership and administration. I am sure that he will receive the hearty support of faculty, alumni, and students."

BILL SETTING 355,000 LIMIT UP TO HOUSE

Holds 14 Months, if Made Law.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—The senate voted today to restrict immigration into the United States between April 1, 1921, and June 30, 1922, to a maximum of 355,000 persons.

It passed the Dillingham bill by a vote of 61 to 2 after amending it to limit admissions from any country to three per cent of the number of natives of that country residing in the United States in 1910. The only votes against the measure were cast by Senator Reed of Missouri, Democrat, and Senator France of Maryland, Republican.

Refuses Tight Gate.

At the same time, the senate went on record against the Johnson bill passed by the house suspending all immigration for a year. It rejected the Johnson bill by 43 to 19. Senators Borah, Jones of Washington, and Willis, Republicans, and Senators Ashhurst, Beckham, Harris, Harrison, Heflin, King, McKellar, Myers, Overman, Pittman, Pomerene, Ransdell, Swanson, Thomas, Trammell, and Underwood, Democrats, supported the Johnson bill.

The measure now goes to conference. No serious difficulty is anticipated in getting the differences of the two houses adjusted.

Who Can Come to U. S.

In its present form the bill will permit admissions as follows:

Belgium	1,482	Montenegro	161
Denmark	5,449	Greece	3,038
France	3,523	Italy	40,294
Germany	75,040	Portugal	1,781
Netherlands	3,694	Roumania	1,979
Norway	12,116	Russia	51,971
Sweden	19,956	Spain	668
Switzerland	3,745	Turkey in Europe	867
United Kingdom	77,206	Turkey in Asia	1,792
Total Northern Europe	202,212	Total outside Northwestern Europe	153,249
Austria Hungary	50,117
Bulgaria	343
Serbia	139	Grand total	355,461

Call Bill Restrictive.

It is contended by some advocates of the Dillingham bill that it will be far more restrictive than the Johnson bill for the reason that the provision in the latter permitting the admission of relatives of immigrants already arrived furnishes a loophole for wholesale evasions.

Senator Dillingham said he was unable to state whether the measure would permit the admission of enough immigrants during the next year adequately to supply the country with "pick and shovel" labor.

Senator Harrison of Mississippi, Democrat, led the fight to make the bill more drastic. He first offered an amendment limiting admissions to 1 per cent. This was beaten by a viva voce vote. He next offered the amendment for 3 per cent and it was carried. Senator Harrison also proposed an amendment to change the basis of computation to the number of naturalized citizens. This was beaten without a roll call.

"Humanitarian" Feature Killed.

An amendment offered by Senator Smith of South Carolina struck out the provision giving the secretary of labor authority to admit individuals if such action is justified as a measure of humanity. This was adopted. Another amendment by Senator Smith requiring the immigration authorities to give preference to wives and children of aliens already in the United States was carried.

Senator Phelan of California raised the Japanese question. He told the senate that the Japanese in Hawaii were obtaining naturalization papers by taking advantage of the act passed during the war to facilitate the naturalization of aliens enlisted in the army. No less than 800 of them have obtained papers in this manner, he said. He proposed an amendment to remedy this condition.

Colt for Quick Action.

Senator Colt of Rhode Island, chairman of the immigration committee, said that raising the Japanese question might defeat the bill and Senator Phelan did not press the amendment.

Senator Reed bitterly condemned the bill. He declared conditions had been greatly exaggerated by propagandists and told the senate the bill was as "narrow as the middle ages" and belonged to "the era of the thumb screw and rack."

If the house agrees to the senate amendments the bill will take effect April 1, 1921, and remain in effect until June 30, 1922.

20,000 CHILDREN DIE FROM ACCIDENTS IN YEAR, REPORT SAYS

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—Accidents take the lives every year of 20,000 children up to the age of 14 years, the Red Cross disclosed today. The tabulation shows that 167 out of every 1,000 child deaths between 5 and 9 are due to accident, while between 10 and 14 the ratio is 177 to 1,000.

Statistics for 1917 showed more deaths from accident than epidemic diseases among children. The percentages of total deaths were: Accident, 17.7; epidemic diseases, 17.1.

Of the accidental deaths in the 5 to 9 year period, 39 per cent were due to vehicles, and in the 10 to 14 year period 32 per cent to the same cause.

LLOYD GEORGE WINS IN WALES ELECTION RACE

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Capt. Ernest Evans, a coalition liberal, was returned to parliament in the Cardigan elections today with a 3,590 majority over Llewellyn Williams, and Independent Liberal. The election of Evans was a great personal triumph for Premier Lloyd George, as it was frankly a contest to see whether Wales, as a province, supported the premier.

A week ago Mr. Williams stated "the election is not between Capt. Evans and myself, but between Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Asquith."

The successful candidate was formerly private secretary to Lloyd George. The defeated contender was formerly a close friend of the premier's but is now a bitter enemy.

Caruso Still Progresses on Road Back to Health

New York, Feb. 19.—Enrico Caruso today apparently was able to maintain the progress he has been making in repulsing a heart attack which early this week threatened his life. He appeared more cheerful and again was able to eat solid food. Physicians said his condition was progressing satisfactorily. He sat up in bed today for the first time since his recent relapse.

N. Y.-Nassau Flight On with 11-Passenger Plane

Keeport, N. J., Feb. 19.—The eleven passenger flying boat Ponce de Leon left here today for a flight to Nassau, Bahama island. This is the first attempt to make a direct flight from New York to Nassau. Stops will be made at Satello island, N. C., Miami and Key West, Fla., and Havana.

UNIVERSITY CLUB EMPTIED BY FIRE

"Frat" Banqueters Flee from Smoke.

Several hundred guests of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity of the University of Chicago were just finishing their last course at a banquet on the eighth floor of the University club last night when a fire started in the Linen Shop, on the first floor, Michigan avenue front, of the club. The club was filled with smoke and members and guests were driven to the street.

The boulevard was quickly filled with excited young men in evening dress. Traffic was held up on Michigan boulevard while the firemen fought the flames.

Miss Gertrude Kruse, 26 years old, 5635 Calumet avenue, a telephone operator for the club, was sitting at the switchboard when her office filled with smoke. She remained at her post and sounded the alarm throughout the building, after notifying the fire department.

The cause of the fire was not learned. The linen store is owned by Isadore Letwinsky.

Chief Michael Corrigan of the First batallion estimated the damage at $15,000. He ordered an investigation of the origin of the fire.

Former U. of C. Student Seized as Shoplifter

A smartly dressed youth who said he was Leo Finn, a student until six weeks ago in the department of fine arts, University of Chicago, was arrested yesterday in a State street department store on a charge of shoplifting. Detective Sergeants William Gorman and Edward McGuire said he was carrying under his overcoat a $65 suit. He said his father was Michael Finn, a realty broker, of Huntington, Ind. He is rooming at 5418 Woodlawn avenue.

Austria to Sue Charles for $20,000,000 of Gems

[Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.]
[Copyright: 1921.]

GENEVA, Feb. 19.—A sensational lawsuit soon will start against the former Emperor Charles, in which the Austrian government seeks to recover $20,000,000 worth of Austrian crown jewels brought to Switzerland by Charles and Count Berchtold. The trial probably will take place in Lauzanne. Charles declares his property is not in Austria, but in Italy.

CITY ELECTION NEXT TUESDAY

Aldermanic elections will be held on Tuesday in every ward in Chicago.

At the same time the voters of the city will say yes or no to the mayor's proposition for an $8,000,000 bond issue to pay the municipal deficit. Numerous organizations of voters have come out in opposition to the bond issue. Mayor Thompson's organization is making a hot fight in behalf of the bonds.

Also there will be a primary vote for city clerk and city treasurer.

The Municipal Voters' league recommends the following aldermanic candidates:

1—George Hodge.
2—Ralph Henderson.
3—Edward D. Lowenthal.
4—Ald. Timothy A. Hogan or Walter J. Norkus.
5—Ald. Joseph B. McDonough.

William Morton, Member of Steamship Firm, Dies

William Morton, manager of the Chicago docks and offices of the Graham & Morton Steamship company, died yesterday at Columbus Memorial hospital of heart disease. He was 41 years old, and the only surviving son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Morton of Benton Harbor. The father founded the line and is manager of it. He and Mrs. Morton are cruising about the south seas.

Farmers Would Pay Tax on Incomes in Produce

MADRID, Feb. 19.—A large group of farmers have sent a novel petition to the government requesting permission to pay their icome tax in produce instead of money, which they declare they lack.

Bomb Flats of Landlord Who Ousts Tenants

A dynamite bomb exploded last night in front of a three story building at 5069 Broadway and mystified the police. They are trying to identify a flivver coupe with two armed men which sped away after the explosion. Porches were damaged and windows shattered.

J. C. Huber, owner of the building, who occupies one of the four apartments and also has a bakery on the first floor, professed surprise. He had had no labor troubles of any kind he said. Mrs. Huber was hurled from her bed to the floor. She was unconscious for some minutes. Physicians said she was not seriously injured.

Rent Raised, Is Report.

Tenants were equally mystified. There are four of them—Mrs. Mary Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Richardson, Max Zerns, and Mr. and Mrs. William Crookes. Mrs. Mary Richardson recalled that when she went to the realty office of Emil H. Schniz to pay her February rent of $55 he handed her a note to vacate by May 1. The other tenants have received similar notices. They understand the rent is to be raised to $75.

The agent for the building was formerly Henry Strassheim. Mrs. Frank Richardson said she was in Strassheim's office two weeks ago when Mrs. Huber entered and said she and Mr. Huber did not wish to renew any leases as the building was to be sold. Strassheim shortly afterwards gave up the agency.

Sees Bombers in Flight.

Mr. Huber was across the street in a barber shop when the bomb was exploded last night. It was placed in the vestibule of his bakery shop, which had been closed for the night. It shattered all the windows in the shop.

Mr. Zerns, who is proprietor of a hardware store on the first floor, opposite the bakery, was standing in the front door. He saw the two men driving away in the coupe, he said, but would not recognize them if he saw them again.

COLLEGE LAD IN CELL AS POLICE HUNT OBERLIN, O.

The moonlight, the police and Oberlin college last night conspired against Robert Moore, 17 years old, 4458 Emerald avenue.

The moonlight, which bathed Washington park in a silvery glow, disclosed Moore and his girl in an automobile near the artesian well.

The police came in the form of South Park Patrolman Robert McKinney, who beheld the automobile as the moon came out from behind a temporary cloud.

"Well, it's not very serious," said the policeman. "We'll let you go if you can identify yourself."

"I am a student of Oberlin college, Ohio," Moore replied.

"There ain't no such college," all the Fiftieth street police station agreed.

Result: Moore is locked up on a charged of disorderly conduct.

NO GAG ON MY SECRETARY OF STATE: HARDING

Ex-Justice "Glad of Chance to Serve."

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—President Elect Harding made his first definite cabinet announcement today, when he presented to a group of correspondents Charles Evans Hughes as the secretary of state.

Mr. Hughes, who arrived last night on a hurried summons from New York, was in conference all morning. Shortly after noon newspaper men were called in. Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes stood shoulder to shoulder by the window.

"Gentlemen," Mr. Harding said, "the only news I have this morning is something which I suspect some of you have surmised. Mr. Hughes has been tendered and has accepted the appointment of secretary of state. I am very happy to have him. I will now let him speak for himself."

"My Duty to Accept."

Mr. Hughes smilingly affirmed this. He said he was glad to accept service under Mr. Harding and that he considered it an "imperative obligation" as a citizen to accept the post and do all he could to help the country and the world.

It was in the same room a few days ago that Mr. Harding announced the refusal of Frank O. Lowden to enter the cabinet as secretary of the navy, even though Mr. Harding told him he was urgently needed. Mr. Lowden gave personal affairs as his reason for declining.

It was here also that Charles G. Dawes talked things over with Mr. Harding and came out, saying he was "not in politics." The result of all this is that Illinois in all probability will be unrepresented in the cabinet and that the great navy post is being juggled around.

Discuss Important Topics.

Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes discussed organization of the department, appointment of an undersecretary, diplomatic posts and other things.

"One of the policies of the new administration," Mr. Harding said, "will be to let the secretary of state talk for the state department."

Mr. Hughes said he would make it his business to see that everything that should be given to the public would be promptly available.

He said that while Mr. Harding trusted him to talk for the state department it was understood there were many thing which could not be talked about in advance. He declined to go into questions of disarmament, league of nations, etc, at this time. Mr. Hughes gives up a great income as a lawyer to accept this $12,000 post.

Wallace Sure of Post.

Henry C. Wallace, Des Moines, is quoted in the current issue of a magazine which reached here today as telling what he intended to do as secretary of agriculture to help Mr. Harding. So this is considered little short of formal announcement by Hr. Harding of this appointment. The Chicago packers will watch Mr. Wallace with deep interest and some misgivings.

Representative Fordney informed Mr. Harding today that the emergency tariff bill would be passed next week. Mr. Harding stated the tariff would be taken up agin as an emergency measure in the next congress, as he did not consider the country could be rehabilitated under the Underwood bill.

Pat Harrison, Wyoming national committeeman, came in today. Gen. Leonard Wood had not arrived by evening. Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Upham, Chicago, came from Palm Beach and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harding this evening. Mr. Harding has been urged to consider D. F. Kelly of Chicago as secretary of commerce.

New Secretary's Views.

New York, Feb. 20.—[Special.]—Charles E. Hughes, appointed secretary of state yesterday, has given voice in speeches and statements since the presidential campaign began last summer to some of his views on international questions. Several are embodied in the following quotations from his speeches:

"This country must do its part, but it must reserve the right to act in any future contingency according to its duty as that contingency reveals it."—Statement at Marion, O., Aug 25, 1920.

"America has her duty toward her own institutions as well as to the world. It has always been possible, and it is possible now, to discharge both."—Speech at Trenton Sept. 18, 1920.

"League, Yes; War, No."

"We are desirous of having a league of free nations; we look to the disposition of justiciable controversies according to the standards of law and justice administered by impartial tribunals which decide according to law and not expediency. But when it comes to going to war, we purpose to use our judgment at the time, without any previous commitment."—Speech at Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 28, 1920.

"The Monroe doctrine is not a 'regional understanding.' It is a distinctively national policy deemed esential to our national security."—Speech at Trenton Sept. 18, 1920.

Foss Urged for Navy.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Nineteen Republican representatives from Illinois, signed a telegram to President Elect Harding today asking him to appoint former Representative George E. Foss, Illinois, as secretary of the navy.

"We are eager to see a man selected secretary of the navy who has high standing in the nation, knowledge of the service, ability as an organizer and qualifications from every standpoint," the telegram said in part.

Signers were McKinley, Cannon, Mann, Madden, Rodenberg, McKenzie, Wilson, Copley, Fuller, Williams, Britten, King, Dennison, Chindblom, Graham, Ireland, Brooks, Juul and Wheeler.

Daugherty Offered Post.

The first written or spoken word direct from President Elect Harding indicating one of his cabinet choices has been received by Representative Frank Murphy, Ohio, who had asked the president elect to consider the name of Percy Tetlow, Ohio. The president elect said definitely that he had asked Harry M. Daugherty to go into his cabinet.

EMPIRE A SMALL WORLD LEAGUE, GEN. SMUTS SAYS

JOHANNESBURG, Union of South Africa, Feb. 18.—President Wilson was persuaded to the view that the British empire is in reality a small league of nations, declared Jan Christian Smuts, premier of the Union of South Africa, here today in addressing an enthusiastic league of nations demonstration. He expressed the hope that America would soon adopt this viewpoint, join the league and assist it with all its might.

A tribute to the work of President Wilson on behalf of the league was paid by the premier, who asserted:

"Hundreds of years hence Wilson's name will be one of the greatest in history. The league, which will be one of the most potential things in the future of mankind, came from the hearts of peoples and embodied inspirations born out of the sufferings of the late war."

COALITION RULE IN GREAT BRITAIN HIT BY ASQUITH

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Former Premier Herbert H. Asquith, addressing the St. Pancreas Liberal association in London today, said the coalition government was not fighting in the elections with clean hands or honest methods. He said the claim made by the coalition candidate in Cardiganshire that Premier Lloyd George was responsible for the old age pension act was a lie.

Referring to Ireland, Mr. Asquith said: "The government, reckless and gamblerlike, has thrown on the table the good name of Great Britain and the whole future and fortune of Ireland. On one hand, the government is setting up the League of Nations, while on the other it is indulging in an orgy of lawless violence. Never has the name of Great Britain sunk so low in the moral scale of nations."

DOMINIONS MAY VOTE ON EGYPT'S PLEA FOR RULE

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Representatives of the British dominions, who will meet here next summer, will be asked to decide upon the recommendations of Lord Milner, former colonial secretary, that negotiations for the conclusion of a treaty according self-government to Egypt be begun, says the Daily Mail. Lord Milner's recommendations were included in a report presented to parliament yesterday.

"Granting self-government to Egypt under the provisions of Lord Milner's report," says the newspaper, "is a departure of highest constitutional interest. Since dominion troops fell while fighting to preserve the Suez Canal and the Egyptian hinterland, it is probable the dominions may have decided opinions on the subject."

John Drinkwater Views Abraham Lincoln Relics

John Drinkwater, the English playwright, whose most notable play is centered about the life of Abraham Lincoln, examined the Lincoln relics owned by the Chicago Historical society, 632 North Dearborn street, yesterday. Among the persons who welcimed him were Addison G. Proctor and George Merryweather, two men who knew President Lincoln. Mr. Drinkwater talked with them concerning incidents in Lincoln's life which they could vouch for. Mr. Drinkwater leaves tonight for New York.

$10,000 Reward for Slayer of Ohio School Teachers

Cleveland, O., Feb. 19.—Cuyahoga county commissioners today voted a reward of $10,000 for information leading to the arrest of the slayer or slayers of Louise Wolf and Mabel Foote, Parma Heights High school teachers who were beaten to death on the village roadside late last Wednesday.

"COLD DAY," DROPS DEAD.

"It's a cold day, pard, eh?" remarked Charles Clark, colored, 42 years old, 7248 South Union street, a teamster, to a fellow bystander, Sol Wahlman, 1509 Edgemont avenue, yesterday, and then dropped dead.

FARWELL LEADS BOOZE RAIDERS; ASSAILS MAYOR

Raps the City Hall for Liquor Leaks.

Led by operatives from the office of Arthur Burrage Farwell, president of the Chicago Law and Order league, dry agents yesterday raided the Joseph Belach saloon at 1720 Diversey boulevard and seized several quarts of whisky and colored alcohol. Following the raid Mr. Farwell attacked the city administration for failure to enforce the eighteenth amendment.

"My investigators and the prohibition agents are doing work that should be done by the city of Chicago," he said. "Our friend the mayor thinks a good deal of the constitution. I believe he ought to carry out his oath to support the constitution and aid in the enforcement of the dry law."

Three Stills Seized.

In other raids dry forces seized three stills, an automobile, several gallons of mash, a quantity of alcohol, and a number of bottles of whisky. One saloon was located at 1339 South Sangamon street and the other in South Chicago.

The stills were discovered after a woman had telephoned the Deering street police the odor of burning sugar was drifting into her flat. The police notified Joe Callahan, chief of the dry squad. In the raid stills were found in two different flats. With them were eight barrels of sugar mash. The automobile had been used to distribute the moonshine.

Gambling Raiders Busy.

Continued raids on gamblers netted the famous Latonia Athletic association, 4142 South Halsted street, and swept Melrose Park of its money slot machines.

Chief Investigator Ben Newmark and the flying squadron of State's Attorney Crowe's office swept down on the Latonia. They found three tables of "stud" poker in progress and a handbook in the making. They dismantled the place, calling for three patrol wagons to bring tables, the telephone outfit, and fourteen prisoners to the Criminal court building. Frank Rutter, 4113 South Halsted street, was arrested as keeper.

Raids in Melrose Park began at "Mother" Kreuger's famous roadhouse, where detectives collected one slot machine. Machines also were taken at the places operated by Louis Stacey, 125 Broadway, and Paul Maggia, 2201 Lake street.

Grand jury action in the gambling cases against Mont Tennes, John Morelock, and James O'Leary is expected tomorrow, according to the state's attorney's office.

CHIEF TO GUARD POLLS AGAINST BOMB THROWERS

Precautions against bomb throwing and other acts of violence and intimidation on Tuesday, election day, were taken yesterday by Chief of Police Fitzmorris. Arrangements were made by him for special details of police at the polls in the wards in which trouble is expected.

An extra strong force of policemen will be stationed in the Nineteenth ward, in which three bombs have been thrown by the partisans of Ald. John Powers and Anthony D'Andrea, rival candidates, in the last few weeks.

Twenty-seven police captains were called to the chief's office yesterday afternoon for a conference on the election day arrangements. The chief warned them all that they must be prepared for any contingency that might arise on Tuesday. He told them that they could judge how serious the trouble in their districts would be by the happenings of the campaign.

Egypt Asks Britain to Buy Cotton for Price Lift

LONDON, Feb. 19.—The prime minister, Mr. Lloyd George, has been approached by representatives of the cooperative syndicate formed in Egypt in January to hold great quantities of cotton in an effort to raise the price of the commodity. They urged Mr. Lloyd George to recommend that the government buy the 2,000,000 cantars the syndicate holds. (A cantar ranges from 100 to 350 pounds.) The syndicate's representatives assert that such action by the government would force up the price of cotton.

O MAN! HOW THE POLITICS BOILS IN 'ARCHEY ROAD'

4th and 5th Play Game as in "Good Old Days."

BY JOHN KELLEY.

"Archey road," the battlefield of many an aldermanic fight, is right now a seething cauldron. Parts of the Fourth and Fifth wards lie along the historic old thoroughfare made famous by "Mr. Dooley." There is a hot contest in both wards for councilmanic honors and, according to "Jawn" McKenna, the people living on the Road have to stay up nights to know where they are at.

J. B. McDONOUGH.

TIMOTHY A. HOGAN

Ald. Tim Hogan of the Fourth ward is a candidate for reëlection. He is opposed by Jim O'Brien, a Halsted street saloonkeeper.

Along "Archey road," from the river east to the Pennsylvania railroad tracks, the fight being waged between Hogan and O'Brien is evidenced by the placards and other forms of advertising. The name Hogan is stenciled on every electric light pole in the ward. Side by side on every billboard and dead wall in the bailiwick are the posters of Hogan and O'Brien. Saloons and other places display the pictures of this or that candidate.

Hot Fight in the Fifth.

West of the river, along "Archey road," to the city limits, the fight between Ald. Robert ("Dutch") Mulcahy and Ald. Joseph McDonough is accentuated by posters, placards, and lithographs.

There is no such thing as being neutral if you live in either the Fourth or the Fifth ward. You are either "wid" a candidate or "agin" him. Families are divided in their choice, the men folk supporting one candidate and the women another.

If you are looking for a fight, you can find it anywhere along "Archey road." Hogan's friends are ready to go to the floor with anybody who says a word against him. O'Brien also has a following. If you stood in front of Finucane's saloon, at Loomis street and "Archey road," and shouted "Hurrah for Tim Hogan!" you would wake up at the county hospital.

Good Old Days No More.

"But it isn't anything like the old days," said "Jawn" McKenna, the philosopher of "Archey road." "No," he continued, sadly, "the fighting spirit is no longer there. These little scraps you see around the corner are nothing. Just a little punch in the nose or something like that.

"O, boys, but we used to have the grand fights on election day in olden times! The moment the polls opened at 6 o'clock in the morning the fight was on. And we kept it up until 11 o'clock at night, so we did. Ah, man dear, but those were the happy days!

"Now, wasn't it much nicer to fight with your fists and give a fellow a black eye or a fractured jaw than to bore a hole through his liver with a bullet? I was never strong for that gun stuff.

Recalls Hot Campaign.

"I remember a campaign when Dad McCormick (God be good to him) and 'Cull' Martin (God rest his soul) were fighting each other for alderman. Each of them held a meeting in the basement of St. Ann's church in Brighton Park. They called each other such terrible names that Father Le[illegible]dure said he had to have the church reconsecrated.

That was about the hottest campaign Archey road ever saw.

"Another time, when Billy O'Brien was alderman of the old Sixth ward, which comprised parts of the now Fourth and Fifth, he was up for reelection. I have forgotten who was his opponent. A certain faction of Democrats was dissatisfied with O'Brien and they were out to beat him. O'Brien was addressing a meeting one night when one of his enemies interrupted with 'I would like to ask the alderman a question.' It was pertinent and had something to do with granting favors to corporations.

"The man who asked the question was tapped on the head with a billy. As he was being carried out of the hall—dead to the world—the chairman said, 'Is there any other gentleman who would like to ask the alderman a question?'

"Days of Real Sport."

"Those were the days of real sport. One year 'Cull' Martin thought he had a fight on his hands, and he induced an Archey road saloonkeeper named Jake Frank to run as a stalking horse against the regular Republican candidate. Martin financed his campaign. He figured that Frank would get a small vote, but it would help defeat the other fellow.

"On election day that fellow Frank ran like a race horse. He got more votes than Martin and the other fellow put together, but, of course, he was counted out. Martin was elected."

McDonough has the support of "Paddy" Carr and the Democratic organization. "Ollie" King, president of the drainage board, is out for Mulcahy. Bill Finucane, Republican committeeman of the Fourth ward, is with O'Brien. "Jim" Dailey is making Hogan's fight his own.

The McKennas, the Shannahans, the Hickeys, the Rileys, the Sullivans, the Kelleys, the Fitzgeralds, the O'Connors and the rest of them will be up bright and early election day and there might be a reminder of old times after all.

"Wouldn't it be grand," said McKenna, "if history would repeat itself and we'd have a real old fashioned election with broken heads and black eyes and ribs caved in? O, boys, wouldn't it be grand?"

Britain Has No Intention of Selling West Indies

LONDON, Feb. 19.—The foreign office today announced that the attitude of the government with regard to suggestions that Great Britain turn over British West Indies to the United States in return for cancellation of war debts had not changed from that of a year ago, at which time the prime minister, Mr. Lloyd George, declared Great Britain had not the slightest intention of bartering or selling any part of the West Indies.

'WHY NOT TEST MAYOR'S PLAN ON CITY FINANCES?'

It Promises Ample Funds, Just Like Bonds.

BY OSCAR E. HEWITT.

It is not a question of whether the city shall pay its floating indebtedness. The issue is: how shall it be paid? The plan on which the electorate will vote next Tuesday is the issuance of $8,000,000 in bonds.

When the city council recommended this method, several aldermen declared it was "bad financing," but pleaded it was the best plan available. Mayor Thompson in his letter to the voters says neither he nor the council believes "in issuing bonds to pay current expenses under ordinary circumstances," but under the present conditions he thinks the council adopted the right course.

These bonds will increase taxes to some extent. The bureau of public efficiency quotes the city controller as estimating a discount loss of $400,000 in the sale of the bonds. If that is true the city will get only $7,600,000 and the taxpayers, it is estimated, will pay $12,042,500 in principal and interest to liquidate the debt.

Mayor's Finance Plan Cited.

But why this method when Mayor Thompson—in the same letter—declares he has "a method for securing ample funds, under which the rate of taxation could be lowered and the burden materially lightened for the taxpayers of moderate means." He also said on April 19, 1919, that "this (method) would provide adequate revenues not only for the city, but for all other local governmental agencies."

The mayor complains the legislature did not adopt the plan two years ago. That was a general assembly when Frank O. Lowden was governor. Len Small is now governor. He has influence with the present legislature and is part of the political organization of which the mayor is the nominal head. The mayor's letter indicates he thinks the plan as good in 1921 as in 1919.

"Prison for Tax Dodgers."

Now the plan. To use the mayor's own words, "if our states tax laws were on the same basis as our federal laws, providing imprisonment for any person who shall refuse or fail to file a complete and true schedule of the property owned by him or under his control, this would discourage tax dodging, distribute the burden of taxation much more equitably than at present, and reduce our tax rate materially."

If this plan, as the mayor says, will "reduce our tax rate materially" and "provide adequate revenues"—on the effectiveness of which no opinion is here expressed—why adopt a plan next Tuesday that will increase the tax rate and provide no revenue whatever for this and future years? Why pay $12,042,500 in principal and interest for an estimated $7,600,000 in cash if the mayor's plan is good?

Another Deficit Looming.

If the bond issue is approved next Tuesday money will be available to pay the floating debts of the city for last year and previous years. It will provide no money to pay or increase salaries this year or settle other bills. At the present rate of expenditures there will be another deficit this year, estimated at $11,000,000.

No official statement of a plan has been issued indicating how this deficit is to be paid. To care for it perhaps the legislature will be asked to adopt the mayor's plan, which he claims will lower the tax rate.

If the bond issue does not pass, then the city will have $7,600,000 of old floating debts and the estimated $11,000,000 deficit of this year to pay—unless expenditures are reduced. That is a total of $18,600,000.

If the mayor's plan will produce $11,000,000 extra income for the city annually with a reduced tax rate, perhaps it will produced $18,600,000 at the present tax rate. Such a result is uncertain, because the mayor has not said how much the tax rate can be reduced under his plan; but it is certain the mayor thinks it will produce $11,000,000, because that is the added sum needed, in the opinion of his department heads, to give the city ample funds," "adequate revenues."

But the proposed bond issue and the mayor's plan are not the only two methods to pay the floating indebtedness. The Civic Federation Citizens' association and Bureau of Public Efficiency have suggested short time notes instead of the long term bonds. This method has been used in New York. To avoid a deficit this year these organizations suggest economy. No one has suggested that the tax rate be increased in such fashion as to get enough cash in one year to pay in full the floating indebtedness.

City After More Income.

Regardless of the outcome on the bond issue the city without doubt will attempt to increase its current income. That means a tax, direct or indirect, which someone will be asked to pay.

Another word on the mayor's plan. His friends probably will contend that the tax valuations cannot be advanced in time to give a tax collection this year that will grant relief. The answer is that this year's tax collections have already been spent. The city will anticipate the collection next year. So if the mayor's plan is so certain to work, why cannot the city get authority of the legislature to anticipate next year's collections on the basis that the mayor's plan is sure fire.

WASHINGTON NEWS —IN BRIEF—

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19.

Rear Admiral Fullam, retired, made a sweeping indictment of the government naval policy before the senate naval committee today, declaring no lessons apparently had been learned from the war.

The senate passed the Dillingham immigration bill amended to restrict immigrants for the next fourteen months to 3 per cent of the number of natives from each country in the United States in 1910.

The state department announced that President Elect Harding is given a clean slate for carrying out his foreign policy by the withdrawal of American representatives from the inter-allied reparations commission.

Republican Leader Mondell told a delegation of farm organization representatives that the house would not consider the meat packer control legislation at the present session.

Secretary of the Interior Payne criticized the present form of organization of the shipping board and said American passenger ships cannot compete with those of other nations while prohibition is enforced.

Republican members of the Illinois congressional delegation sent a telegram to President Elect Harding to urge the appointment of former Representative Foss, as secretary of the navy.

The house by a vote of 190 to 132 adopted a special rule for the sending of the emergency tariff bill to conference. Conferees will meet early next week.

JOB HOLDERS TO MAN POLLS ON ELECTION

11th Hour Spurt for Bond Issue Made.

Sudden activity shown yesterday by the city hall forces in parts of the city in which they had heretofore manifested little interest in the aldermanic battles resulted in an increase of interest in the city election on next Tuesday.

At this election a proposition to issue $8,000,000 in bonds to pay the city's floating indebtedness will be voted on. Voters will also nominate party candidates for city clerk and city treasurer and elect aldermen.

Additional importance is given to the aldermanic election because of the possibility that the thirty-five aldermen elected may constitute the entire city council for a year or possibly two years. There is a legal question as to the right of the "holdover" aldermen to retain their seats, and in some wards the "holdovers" have recognized this by becoming candidates for election this year, although the terms to which they were elected have still a year to run.

Final in a Dozen Wards.

In a dozen or more wards it is expected that Tuesday's result will be final. Wherever a candidate obtains a majority of all the votes cast he is elected. In several wards there are only two candidates. In others the real contest is between two leading candidates, and one of these is likely to obtain a majority. In wards where no candidate obtains a majority the two receiving the greatest number of votes will run again in the supplemental election on April 5.

The election falls on a holiday — Washington's birthday. This will enable an army of city employés to work at the polls. This fact, added to the circularizing of the 900,000 voters on the registration lists with literature in favor of the bond issue and in some cases aldermanic candidates, caused alarm among opponents of the city hall.

Guernsey Sounds Warning.

"The voters must not be caught napping," said Ald. Guy Guernsey of the Seventh ward last night. "It is evident that the city hall is making a last minute effort which contemplates the expenditure of large sums of money to give it what they want. At the last minute a circular letter appealing for the bond issue has been mailed to 900,000 voters. In it are three inclosures. I am in a position to know that such a circular cannot be put out for less than 7 cents each. That means that $81,000 is being spent for this circular alone.

"In certain of the wards where the city hall has appeared apathetic money is being spent at the last minute for favorite candidates for aldermen. In my own ward a circular has been sent out for Vandon Gray, one of my opponents, who has apparently been adopted by the city hall. This letter would cost from $2,000 to $3,000 alone, and I understand that the city hall is going to spend $8,000 against me. From other wards I hear similar reports."

Little Contest in Fourteen Wards.

In fourteen wards there is little or no contest. In these the results will probably be the reëlection of the following aldermen: Kenna in the First ward, Anderson in the Second, Woodhull in the Eighth, Madderom in the Ninth, Horan in the Eleventh, Cermak in the Twelfth, Maypole in the Fourteenth, Kaindl, in the Fifteenth, Touhy in the Eighteenth, Crowe in the Twenty-first, Hogan in the Thirty-first, Garner in the Thirty-third, Kostner in the Thirty-fourth, and Clark in the Thirty-fifth. Only Anderson, Madderom, Kaindl, Maypole, and Kostner have more than nominal opposition.

In the Fifth and Tenth wards Ald. McDonough and Klaus are running for reëlection and their opponents are their colleagues, Ald. Mulcahy and McNichols, Democratic proteges of the city administration. McDonough and Klaus refuse to take city hall orders and are opposing the bond issue.

Hot Battle in Twenty-third.

The Twenty-third ward is another hot battle. Ald. Wallace, who disclosed the payment of more than $1,000,000 last year to two city building experts, is offensive to the city administration, which is attempting to beat him with James H. Poague, a Democrat.

In the Fourth and the Twenty-fifth wards are also good fights. In the former the city hall is attempting to retire Ald. Hogan with James J. O'Brien, in whose saloon Policeman Richard Burke was murdered two years ago. In the Twenty-fifth Charles J. Krafft, former service man, is receiving Thompson support from the ward organization which Friday indorsed the bond issue. E. I. Frankhauser, who is opposed to the bond issue, is the other contender.

Ald. Eaton in the Sixth ward with five opponents and Ald. Guernsey in the Seventh ward with two contestants are expected to pull through. But in the Thirty-second ward, which Ald. Fisher has served for fifteen years, the Thompson contingent is attempting to slide over quietly Benjamin S. Wilson, a grain broker.

In the Third ward the Thompson candidate, John H. Johntry, has a decided advantage, although the Democratic organization is putting up a fight for Ira Salomon, a former soldier who served in Siberia.

The Thompson man, Ald. Shaffer, in the Thirteenth ward must gain more speed to win over Albert J. Horan, who has openly advocated a fight on Mayor Thompson and expressed opposition to the bond issue. There is also about the same situation in the Twenty-sixth ward, where Charles G. Hendricks, the Thompson entry, is being rushed by John J. Hoellen, a shoe merchant.

Bombs Add to Interest.

The most spectacular battle of all has been in the Nineteenth ward, where Ald. Powers is being fought by Anthony D'Andrea. Two bombs have been thrown and several persons injured already.

Ald. Armitage, Thompson follower, claims he will win easily in the Twenty-seventh ward, but he has been working night and day for some time. Charles A. Miller is his chief opponent among five.

In the Thirtieth ward, former Alderman William J. Lynch is carrying the Thompson banner. Thomas McCarthy, a grocer, claims he will win. He has been shouting against the bond issue.

The contest is between Ald. Kovarik and Ward Superintendent Michael J. O'Connell in the Twenty-ninth ward. O'Connell claims the support of the city hall. Ald. Dorney with the same support is having trouble in the Twenty-fourth ward from Frank Bobrytzke, president of the National Milk company. The Twenty-second ward has a Thompson candidate in Arthur P. Albert. Ald. Hibbeler is the other principal contestant.

Opponents of the city hall predict that the Thompson candidate in the Seventeenth ward, Thomas P. Devereux, will run third. Ald. Adamkiewicz and John Janowski are the other two leaders.

ALD. WALLACE TO SUE POLITICAL FOES FOR LIBEL

Charging that the Twenty-third ward Thompson-Lundin organization has libeled him in three letters sent out over the signature of Samuel E. Erickson, clerk of the Superior court, Ald. Thomas O. Wallace, candidate for reëlection, announced last night that he will sue Mr. Erickson on Monday for $50,000 for alleged libel.

"My attorney, Ald. Walter Steffen, to whom I have turned over copies of these letters, says there is no doubt that they are libelous," Ald. Wallace said.

Mr. Erickson and his organization have been "three faced," according to Ald. Wallace.

"In a letter to the Swedish citizens, Mr. Erickson makes statements which he belittles in a letter to the German population of the ward," Ald. Wallace charged.

A third letter, written on the stationery of the Park-Harbor Citizens' association, an organization which has been practically dead since 1917 when it conducted a fight against billboards in residence districts, is phrased to catch votes in the Lake Shore drive territory, according to Ald. Wallace.

"At least 50 per cent of the names carried on the Park-Harbor communication are names of men who will vote for me and one is the name of one of my precinct captains," Ald. Wallace declared.

Drops Dead as Brother Did a Few Weeks Ago

Edward Shufelt, 60 years old, of 35 East Twenty-second street, dropped dead shortly before noon yesterday in the hallway just outside his real estate office at the same address. The body was found by Frank Svancer, 1758 West Fifty-first street, with whom he had been talking. A twin brother, an ex-alderman, died suddenly several weeks ago after an attack of heart disease in Henrici's restaurant at 71 West Randolph street.

Highway Construction School to Open Tomorrow

Three hundred members of the Illinois state highway department, including many contractors and engineers engaged in road building, will go to Urbana Monday to attend a week's "short course" in highway construction, the first school of the kind known. The school will open in the University Auditorium at 9 a. m. tomorrow.

DANCE TO OPEN NEW COLLEGE.

The building at 1327 North Clark street, once an armory of the 1st Illinois cavalry, is to be the new home of the Illinois College of Chiropody. The college will take formal possession of the building on Washington's birthday. A housewarming dance and entertainment will be given in the large drill hall.

3 FRENCH GENERALS ARE HONORED WITH MARSHALS' BATONS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Feb. 19.—The Briand cabinet this afternoon named Gens. Desperey, Fayolle and Lyautey marshals of France.

Gen. Desperey was in command of the Aisne front in May, 1918, and when he warned the allies' high command that a German offensive threatened he was told to mind his own business, an attack being expected at Amiens.

On May 27 the Germans smashed Chemin des Dames and Gen. Desperey was relieved. Afterwards Gen. Desperey was sent to Salonika and commanded the allies' offensive which defeated the Bulgars.

Gen. Fayolle commanded a French army in the bloody Somme battle and was the first to discover the Germans' retreat to the Hindenburg line, early in 1917.

When the Italians collapsed at Caporette, Gen. Fayolle, commanding the French corps, rushed to the Tagliamento river to aid them. Afterwards Gen. Fayolle returned to the west front and commanded the center army group and took part in the Chateau Thierry engagements.

Gen. Lyautey was minister of war in Briand's cabinet in 1916 and since then military governor of Morocco.

Probes Girl's Story of Handkerchief Robbers

Lieut. Benjamin Enright of the Stanton avenue station is investigating the story of 15 year old Mary Willis, colored, cashier of a movie theater at 3112 Indiana avenue. She said two men with revolvers robbed the office of $79 and then had her smell a handkerchief. She lost consciousness, she said. Lieut. Enright sniffed the handkerchief. It had been soaked in oil of cloves, he said.

LENIN'S HORDES BEGIN ATTACKS IN ASIA MINOR

Georgia Rulers Flee as Reds Approach.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Feb. 19.—The long threatened bolshevik offensive has been unleashed.

The Reds are striking from the Caucasus and are aiming to establish contact with the Turk Nationalists during the London conference on Asia Minor. The French foreign office has learned that the 6th and 9th bolshevik armies, supported by Gen. Budeny's cavalry corps, are sweeping into Georgia.

The Georgian government announces that it has evacuated Tiflis and is fleeing toward Batum, where it expects to receive protection from the British navy.

Bolsheviki in Tiflis.

It is reported that Red cavalry has already entered Tiflis and is deploying southward along the railway, which is the sole line of communication into Armenia and Turkey, toward Kars and Erzerum.

The bolsheviks have already established contact with Persia, by way of Azerbaijan and along the Caspian sea, but that region lacks railroads and operations could be carried on there only with great difficulty.

The collapse of Georgia removes the last obstacles between the Reds and Mustapha Kemal Pasha and places the Baku oil fields an dthe pipe line to Batum in the hands of the soviet.

Bolshevik reinforcements of troops and munitions for Kemal will seriously menace the position of the Greeks at the Smyrna bridgehead, and it is believed will force the British to consent to the recognition of Kemal and to proceed with the revision of the Sevres treaty.

KEMAL AID IN ROME

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

ROME, Feb. 19.—Bekir Samy Bey, the foreign minister for the Turkish nationalist government, who is in Rome awaiting an invitation from England to attend the London conference on Asia Minor, today declared that America had been deceived by Great Britain regarding Turkey.

He said the true capital of Turkey was at Angora and not Constantinople where the sultan is the prisoner of the British.

"The war will continue," he declared, "until every Turkish patriot has been killed or until our country is freed from the Greeks and all other enemies of Islam.

"I am sure that America will not fail to support Turkey and will not be guided by England, who is blind to all except its present interests. If we do not have our peace the whole world will never get its peace."

War Builders to Hold Reunion and Banquet

The Construction Division association will hold its annual reunion and banquet at the Morrison hotel on Feb. 26. It is made up of ex-officers of the construction division of the army, together with civilians associated with the division during its war program, which has been declared to be the largest single construction program in the history of the world. Its most conspicuous feat was the building of sixteen national army cantonments and sixteen national guard camps in ninety days. Its work covered 581 projects and involved an expenditure in twenty-two months of $1,200,000,000.

YANKS TO QUIT RHINE DISTRICT 500 EACH MONTH

U. S. May Keep 8,000 in Germany.

BY JOHN CLAYTON.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

COBLENZ, Feb. 19. — American forces in Germany will be reduced 500 or more monthly until their total strength numbers 8,000, unless speeding up removal orders come from Washington after the administration changes, March 4.

At the present time there are 15,000 Yanks on the Rhine. Military headquarters expects the reduction to be completed by January, 1922. The first group of 500 will sail from Antwerp this week.

Opinions among the officers and men in the Rhine army is that the entire force will be withdrawn when Mr. Harding enters office. Rumors of their return to America are not received by the men with cheers, as they feel they have the pick of the entire army service, and not the least of the attractions is that the army of occupation is not dry. They still make beer and wines in Germany and there is no danger of Coblenz going dry.

The feeling between American troops and civilians is better here than in any other occupied territory. The Yanks show their ability to make friends anywhere, which is not the case with other armies of occupation. The majority of the population will be sorry to see the Americans leave.

Germany regards the Yanks as a protecting force and say the American trooper does not carry hate in his heart. His spirit is reciprocated by the Teuton population.

WOMAN CHASES MAN DOWN LOOP FIRE ESCAPE

The crowds at Clark and Madison streets heard the cry of the chase.

On a fire escape of the Morrison hotel a woman clad only in a kimono was pursuing a man. Down the perilous steps they flew, the woman gaining. Now and then she halted through modesty, as the playful breeze became more playful.

The capricious wind gave the advantage to the man. He swung from the fire escape. The woman was close behind. But the man fell into the arms of Policeman Thomas Sweeney of the Central station.

"He was looking into my window," exclaimed Mrs. Eleen Monohan, a widow residing in room B 101, Morrison hotel.

"I was just climbing the fire escape looking for my friend Carl," explained James Sadik, 23 years old, 1742 West Huron street. Sadik was booked on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Choirs of Four Churches Will Give Concert Today

A service of church music under the direction of the Choir Directors' Guild of America will be held at Immanuel Baptist church, 2320 South Michigan avenue, this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The choirs of the First Congregational church of Western Springs, the Waveland Avenue Congregational, the Humboldt Park Baptist, and the Immanuel Baptist churches will take part.

Lincoln, World Spy, in Austrian Jail, Is Report

BERLIN, Feb. 19.—Ignatius Tribich Lincoln, notorious as an "international spy," has been arrested in Austria, says a Vienna dispatch to the Tageblatt.

BULLARD WARNS NATION AGAINST DROPPING ARMS

General Makes Appeal for Safety.

New York, Feb. 19.—Maj. Gen. Robert Lee Bullard, former commander of the Second army in the Argonne, now commander of the Second corps area, vigorously opposed disarmament here today before the National Republican club.

"Any proposition of disarmament or any limitations of armament is a trick," he said, "either to gain or maintain an advantage.

"To Hear Is to Laugh."

"Coming from representatives of different nations, the discussion always consists of two parts: First, a nice diplomatic expression of profound benevolence and friendship toward all other nations; second, truth, regretful but to them undeniable, that they are forced by the other nations to arm and keep armed. To hear them is to laugh."

Discussing the subject from a "purely American standpoint," Gen. Bullard declared that "disarmament for us would mean the abandonment of our financial superiority over other nations of the earth."

"We have it," he added. "Are we willing to abandon it—to put ourselves on a level with others? That would be asinine kindness."

Weakness No Safeguard.

Disarmament alone, the speaker continued, does not obviate war, for "unarmed or ill armed peoples are continually at war." Culture and arms were linked by the speaker, who pointed to Great Britain and Japan now and the Germany of pre-war days as examples. Japan was alluded to as a marked example of "progressiveness and rapidly increasing enlightenment."

"It is a significant fact," Gen. Bullard declared, "that from the monkey to the American the state of their culture and their advancement correspond exactly to the state of their armament. The monkeys that in the struggle of life had had sense enough to pick up and use a stick as an arm developed into men. The others remained monkeys."

UTILITIES AID AND TYPIST GET WEDDING PERMIT

An office romance reached its climax yesterday afternoon when Arthur M. Evans, 41 years old, of 367 East Fifty-eighth street, an assistant secretary of the public utilities commission, and Miss Louise French, 23 years old, of 6417 Ellis avenue, a stenographer for the commission, obtained a marriage license.

When the Evans home was reached over the telephone Mrs. Lizzie Evans, the secretary's mother, said she was surprised by news of the event.

She said her son had left home early yesterday to go to work and she did not know of any plans regarding the marriage license.

Efforts to find the couple after they left the county building armed with the license were unavailing. Chief Clerk Louis C. Legner issued the license.

HIGHER TAXES THREAT CAUSES RENTAL 'PAUSE'

Some Flat Owners Agree to Halt.

Tenants scored in scattering cases yesterday in the conflict over rent raises. A few landlords summoned into the office of Joseph F. Peacock, city real estate agent, agreed not to raise their prices.

Landlords and real estate agents poured into the city hall during the day with explanations intended to justify their rent increases. In greater numbers came communications giving reasons.

Most of those who called personally were unable to give explanations that were deemed satisfactory. They were told that unless they receded at once from their positions the board of review and the assessors would act accordingly in determining their taxes.

Mr. Peacock emphasized this point and the result was that a large number of landlords and agents promised to let the rents remain where they are.

She Is Reducing Rents.

Among those who agreed not to raise rents was Mrs. M. Rattner of Oak Park, owner of a large apartment building at 1137 South Central Park avenue. She had been sent a notice by mistake.

"I am not raising rents—I am reducing them," she said. "I am cutting the rent of my four room flats from $60 to $55. My five room flats, which have been $70, will be $60 after May 1, and my six room flats will be reduced from $80 to $70."

A clerk made apologies to Mrs. Rattner for the error in sending her a notice.

Still More Good News.

Mrs. James Osborne of 6238 South Campbell avenue declared she was raising the rent on only one flat, actuated by a desire to get rid of the tenant. The rent of other flats in the building will remain the same, she said.

Martin Finlayson, 1500 West Congress street, is another landlord who caused a slight rift in high rent clouds by telling Mr. Peacock that he is reducing the rent on his apartments $5 a month.

While landlords and agents were busy explaining, the board of assessors took its first step to wreak revenge on property owners who have raised the rents more than 50 per cent. Information regarding more than seventy-five such landlords was filed with Charles Krutckoff, a member of the board, who said there is no doubt these landlords will have an immediate revaluation of their property which will give the county the greater part of the increased rentals. The board is now engaged in making its valuations.

Doubt as to whether increased taxes will have the desired effect on landlords and cause them to reduce rents was expressed by a number of persons. It was argued by A. E. Jessurun, secretary of the Chicago Tenants' Protective league, that the landlords simply will "pass the buck" to the tenants next fall and next spring.

"The landlords and real estate agents are simply working to defeat the proposed anti-rent profiteering legislation at Springfield," said Mr. Jessurun.

Evidently the rule promulgated by Gen. Davis against a second raise in rents when they were raised in 1920 is being disregarded by some landlords and agents. One tenant of a north side flat was given notice yesterday of a raise from $150 to $175 and was given only three days to say whether he would take it. A year ago he was raised $30 a month to $150.

Kessinger Report Ready.

The Kessinger housing commission's report will be placed before both houses of the legislature Wednesday for action.

The report carries several recommendations, including one for a bill permitting cities to establish rental commissions. The report, which has been in the hands of Gov. Small, will be accompanied by his message concerning the recommendations. He urges the legislature to give them earnest consideration.

Another recommendation makes a plea for the bill of Senator Dailey providing for joint legislative investigation of alleged combinations and agreements which restrict building construction in Chicago.

The commission also recommends that the landlord and tenant act be amended and that the forcible entry and detainer act be so changed that a court may grant a stay of execution for six months in cases growing out of exorbitant rental demands. The recommendations also ask that lease clauses containing a waiver of jury trial be wiped out.

Oppose Frame Buildings.

Opposition to the order suspending the fire limits building regulations, now before the city council, was expressed by the Illinois Society of Architects through F. E. Davidson, president. Mr. Davidson argues that brick bungalows can be built as cheaply as frame dwellings. He says his organization is working on plans to amend the building ordinances in such fashion as to cheapen materially the cost of erecting brick homes. The plans are to be submitted to the city council.

Swindled by Man Who Planned to Make Eggs

Racine, Wis., Feb. 19.—Otto H. Dittman of Waupaca reported to the police today that he had been swindled out of $500 by one C. F. Rowlands, who interested him in a scheme to manufacture a "substitute" for albumin. According to Rowlands' plan, Dittman said, they were to put the barnyard egg producer out of business, the so-called substitute being expected to serve all purposes for which the whites of eggs are ordinarily used. Rowlands disappeared after Dittman had issued checks to cover "expenses."

Hawaii to Seize Arms in Time of Trouble

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

HONOLULU, Feb. 19.—An administration measure introduced into the Hawaiian territorial legislature authorizes the seizure of all privately owned firearms when, in the opinion of the governor, the commanding general of the Hawaiian department, and the commandant of the Pearl Harbor Naval station, an emergency or crisis has arisen. No one in authority would discuss the measure or make a statement as to the imminence of such an emergency or crisis.

NATIONAL PLOT TO ROB MAILS BARED BY P. O. OFFICIAL

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—There is a nation-wide plot, centrally directed, to loot mail trains, postoffices, and postoffice wagons, George M. Sutton, chief of the postal inspection service, declared today.

Sutton had been investigating a robbery in Toledo, where $400,000 loot was obtained on Thursday last, and another on the Northern Pacific railroad near Minneapolis on Friday night, with a loss estimated at several hundred thousand dollars.

"I am confident we soon will be able to break up the nation-wide organization of postoffice burglars, and other criminals who are planning burglaries at many points," he said. "There is every expectation that the bandits who robbed the Toledo postoffice wagon will be caught."

There has been a sharp increase in the number of postoffice and mail train robberies, the postoffice records show.

Yank Deserters Fight with Mexican Soldiers

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 19.—Reliable information from Chihuahua City and from Ojinaga states that a running fight took place yesterday between Mexican customs men and a small body of former American soldiers, said to be deserters from the army, who were on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. One of the men was wounded and captured, the advices stated.

French-Polish Economic Treaty Near Completion

PARIS, Feb. 19.—Premier Briand had a long conference today with Prince Sapieha, Polish minister of foreign affairs, and M. LETTERS BARE WIDE INTEREST IN HOMES PLAN

Co-operative Building Idea Draws Approval.

BY O. A. MATHER.

The suggestion that Chicago's building trades workers, thousands of whom now are idle, might form coöperative groups for building their own homes has brought to the writer a flood of letters and offers to facilitate such a movement.

That widespread interest in the proposal for coöperative home building has been aroused is evident from most of the letters received. The developments may be given as follows:

A number of Chicago banks have said they have what in the aggregate amounts to almost unlimited funds to finance building at rates ranging from 6 to 6½ per cent, with commissions from 2½ to 3½ per cent, on five year loans. They will lend amounts ranging from one-third to one-half of the total value of property.

Offers by Realty Dealers.

Numerous real estate dealers and subdividers have offered to sell property at what they claim are considerable reductions and to finance the purchase of materials. Others have offered to sell property on easy terms or to take second mortgages.

Some large dealers in building materials are considering an announcement to the effect that they will offer their materials at a certain definite advance over pre-war prices, thus meeting the challenge of bankers that they are willing to lend money at approximately 25 per cent above pre-war rates.

There are intimations that labor will be disposed to meet in fair measure any definite and fair endeavor of the material dealers to revive building by lowering costs.

Excerpts from Letters.

Here are excerpts from letters received:

Real Estate Dealer—I have talked this matter over with different material and lumber men [naming several of the largest concerns in Chicago] and they all pronounce the plan sensible and practical.

Industrial Corporation—There would be a big boom in building construction if costs could be brought down to a reasonable figure. Manufacturers of some building materials are showing a disposition to do their part by cutting prices. It remains to be seen whether retail dealers and labor will fall in line.

Laboring Man—Your coöperative proposition to build homes for working men is fine. But do you and the public know that every labor union in the city has an agreement with the employers of the various trades that they shall do no work on new buildings unless employed by some member of this master builders' association? All the men I meet are willing to give a good day's work for a day's pay. Go after the "big boys" all the way from the banker who wants high interest down to the crooked labor agent who gets his one way or another.

Architect—I feel your suggested solution of the housing problem of Chicago is doomed to failure for the simple reason that the building mechanics will not trust each other, and possibly with good reason.

Building Figures Discouraging.

Finally, let us take the latest data regarding general building conditions. This week's review of R. G. Dun & Co. reads:

"While expectations or a revival of construction activities prevail in various quarters, the January building statistics do not make a favorable showing. As reported by ninety-eight of the country's principal centers, permits issued for new structures involved an estimated expenditure of about $50,500,000 in January, or the smallest amount of any month in a long period.

"The decline from the total of January, 1920, when the permits granted in the same number of cities had a value exceeding $108,000,000, is 53.5 per cent."

BISHOP SHAYLER NOON SPEAKER AT THE GARRICK

BISHOP E. V. SHAYLER.

Bishop Shayler of Nebraska, formerly rector of Grace church, Oak Park, for nine years, will be the Lenten noon-day service preacher at the Garrick theater this week at 12:10 to 12:30 p. m. daily, excepting Saturday. The bishop will visit his old parish in Oak Park on Wednesday evening, and will also preach at the Church of the Redeemer Thursday evening, in the parish where Courtenay Barber, in charge of the noon-day services for the Church club, is the junior warden.

FEDERAL HEALTH CHIEF ARRIVES AT NEW YORK

U. S. Soon to Take Over Quarantine Work.

New York, Feb. 19.—Surgeon General Cummings of the United States Public Health Service arrived today to inspect the quarantine station, now under state control, which soon is to be taken over by the federal authorities.

It was announced a force of extra men, including many skilled in handling typhus and other contagious diseases in Cuba, Mexico, and abroad, are on their way to New York.

More Disinfecting Done.

The disinfecting equipment at the Hoffman island detention station was supplemented with material used by the army in delousing world war veterans returning from overseas.

The health department began disinfecting foreign mail on incoming steamers, and provided for disinfection of cars used by various railroads in transporting immigrants' belongings.

Another Suspect Found.

An additional case of suspected typhus was reported to the health department late this afternoon. The patient, a 7 year old boy, arrived from Italy three weeks ago. He was removed to a Brooklyn hospital and members of his family were isolated.

"My recent visit to Europe," Health Commissioner Copeland said, "convinced me many desirable people are anxious to come to America, and they should be permitted to enter."

$100 PER PLATE DINNER BRINGS $50,000 FOR ERIN

Senator Walsh Sounds Ringing Appeal.

A dinner in the gold room of the Congress hotel last night netted $50,000 for relief work in Ireland. Among the diners, each of whom paid $100 for his place at a table, were many leaders in Chicago's public and industrial life, including Mayor Thompson, J. Hamilton Lewis, Alfred Austrian, C. H. Markham, C. H. Wacker, and Maj. A. A. Sprague. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts was the chief speaker. The Most Rev. George W. Mundein, D. D., offered invocation.

Senator Walsh, in appealing for aid for Ireland, put aside the question of causes that have led to the need for relief.

"We may entertain different views concerning that," he said. "This is a relief movement and not a political one. The people of Ireland are today passing through the shadow of the valley of death. One hundred and five towns have been either partially or wholly destroyed. Nearly a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of property has been confiscated. More than 200,000 men, women, and children are today in need of help."

Charges British Propaganda.

Senator Walsh charged that British propaganda has made the Irish cause unpopular in America.

"One may plead for the Poles, for the Jews, for the Roumanians, or for any people or cause, and gain hearty response in America—unless one mentions the Irish," he said. "Then one is hushed."

"In the midst of turmoil, strife, suffering, sacrifice overseas, there are men who dare to ask: 'Why don't the Irish in Ireland and America leave things alone?' One might as well ask why a sick man should call a physician, or why the attacked should struggle with the robber.

"Why don't the Irish leave things alone? If they are of Irish birth, ask them why their fathers and their grandfathers didn't leave things alone when they lived in mud cabins and their children ate the bread of poverty and they themselves were forced to toil and labor for a landlord whose face they never saw.

Policy Means Stagnation.

"Leave things alone? Why did not our ancestors stay in Ireland and crush the longing for home, happiness, and freedom which they found in this bounteously blessed land? The policy of 'hands off' and negation and 'laissez-faire' by people and governments is a policy of stagnation and death.

"Every reactionary force in the world, every usurper of the rights and the property of others, is a believer in the policy of hands off.

"Let there be no misunderstanding of the purpose and the spirit of the American people who sympathize with the present condition of want in Ireland. No one is seeking to make trouble betwen this government and Great Britain. We believe the friendship of the world, especially of the English speaking people, for one another is of priceless value to civilization. We cannot conceive of any complication that would be more destructive to the progress of the world than a conflict between America and England."

Senator Walsh explained that, while he established the American committee for relief in Ireland, he had not done so until many appeals had been made to him.

Threatened with Extinction.

The Irish as a people are threatened with extinction, according to Senator Walsh.

"Naturally," he contended, "the relief movement in America must be led by those who have Irish blood in them. We must act at once. We shall not wait to behold, as in the famine days of 1848, the wretched Irish mother with haggard looks and streaming eyes, with famished children clinging to her tattered garments, gazing piteously into her face and begging for food she could not give.

"The voice of Erin is calling. Must it sound in vain?"

Attorney James G. Condon also spoke. D. F. Kelly was toastmaster. The Paulist choristers, with their purple robes, contributed picturesqueness. They sang "Star Spangled Banner," "America," and other songs.

Missing Father Sought; Three in Family Ill

William J. Patton Jr., of Glenview, Ill., appealed to THE TRIBUNE yesterday to aid him in the search for his father, who disappeared on Jan. 3.

"We haven't heard a word since he went away," said young Patton. "My sister and brother are ill of pneumonia and my mother is ill from worrying over his absence. If you can find dad tell him to come home and all will be forgiven and forgotten."

The son, who is not yet 16, has been carrying on his father's heating, plumbing and electrical business.

ALLIES REGRET U.S. QUITTING ON REPARATIONS

Frenchman Recalls Days of War.

PARIS, Feb. 19.—Roland W. Boyden, whose withdrawal as unofficial representative of the United States from the allied reparations commission was announced yesterday, delivered his farewell statement to the reparations commission here today.

"Your withdrawal," Louis Dubois, the president of the commission, said, "leaves not only a void in our hearts but in our work.

Hopes for Return.

"Let us believe, however, that the withdrawal is only temporary—that it is not good-by but simply au revoir.

"America," continued M. Dubois, "ought not to and cannot forget that at the call of the spirit of honor and justice her best sons crossed the sea; that she took part in the war and collaborated in the making of the treaty of peace so that justice might be done."

Sir John Bradbury, a British member, joined in complimenting Mr. Boyden's work.

"Mr. Boyden was ostensibly an observer, but in reality he was a wise and discreet counselor in the commission," the Paris Midi said.

Hines Still on the Job.

Walker D. Hines, specially appointed arbitrator in the distribution of river shipping and the work of the shipping board and army services, will continue his work of arbitrating and distributing former enemy river tonnage. The shipping board's office in Paris also will be continued indefinitely.

American welfare organizations still are doing a limited amount of welfare work in Europe and the Hoover relief administration is active in the central European countries.

Under the peace treaty payment by Germany for the cost of the armies of occupation has priority over all other reparations, and the question now must be handled separately by the American government.

LEAVES HARDING FREE

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Withdrawal of American representation from the inter-allied reparations commission, announced today, enables the incoming administration to take up the entire problem of peace as it sees fit, according to state department officials.

U. S. in Suspended War.

It was explained that this country still is at war, or in a state of armistice with Germany, and therefore the occupation of a portion of the Rhineland by American troops has no association with the question of reparations.

It was declared emphatically at the state department that its action in recalling Roland W. Boyden and other Americans from the reparations commission and its sub-bodies was not to be taken in any sense as an action hostile to the allied powers. On the contrary, it was said the reparations question must be handled by unified action, as the United States is "morally bound" to coöperate with the allies in an effort to solve the reparations problem.

JAILER BALKS THE PLAN OF "BIG SIX" TO WED IN JAIL

The romance of Martin ("Big Six") Sicks and Miss Marie Wornowicza reached an apparently hopeless impasse yesterday when Jailer James Fitzgerald Lee refused to allow the prisoner to be married in the county jail. Sicks is under sentence of from one year to life, following his conviction last week in Judge Joseph David's court for participating in the Heller-Rose jewel robbery. Plans are being made to take him to Joliet early this week.

Sicks caused a sensation in court following his conviction when he asked the judge to marry him. Miss Wornowicza, undaunted by the judge's refusal, obtained a marriage license and yesterday personally appeared before the judge and asked to have the ceremony performed.

Again Judge David refused, and when his questions revealed the fact that she was penniless a collection of $11 was taken up for her. With the money she left the courtroom to search for some one who would perform the ceremony.

ROB ST. LOUIS WOMAN OF $2,021.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 19.—Thieves beat Mrs. Anna Gasich, 24 years old, over the head with their revolvers and fled with $2,021 in cash, amid a fusillade from a policeman's revolver today. Money was scattered along the street by the robbers in their flight, $478.80 being recovered.

MEN IN IRELAND REFUSE TO JOIN CIVILIAN GUARD

Only Two Obey Black and Tan Order.

BY JOHN LESTER.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

DUBLIN, Feb. 19.—Black and tans visited the shops in Macroom yesterday and ordered all the men to report to police headquarters today for the formation of a so-called civil guard. Only two youths obeyed the order. They were compelled to perform menial work, such as scrubbing floors, before they were released.

Many of the young men have left town to join republican flying columns.

About fifty prisoners were removed from the Cork jail today. They were taken in lorries by soldiers and later were placed aboard a vessel which put out to sea.

The search of the Dublin area, which began at 2 a. m. Friday, was concluded this afternoon when all troops moved off.

Heavy rifle firing was heard early today at Charleville, County Cork. All the wires outside the town were cut last night, trees were chopped down and thrown across the road, and trenches dug. Citizens knew nothing of this until they were commandeered by troops to repair the roads.

SCORES BRITISH POLICY.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Great Britain's campaign against the Irish republican movement was denounced yesterday by the Rt. Rev. Patrick Joseph Clune, archbishop of Perth, Australia, upon his return to that city from Europe, says a dispatch to the London Times. While visiting in Ireland Archbishop Clune took part in unofficial negotiations looking to the restoration of peace between the British government and the leaders of the Sinn Fein.

"I say with regret and reluctance," the archbishop is quoted as saying, "that every infamy perpetrated by Germany during her occupation of Belgium has been renewed and repeated and in some cases exceeded in Ireland. I subscribe to every word used by Eamonn de Valera in his recent charges against English forces in Ireland.

"A blacklist of persons who are to be assassinated is placed in the hands of those in the pay of the crown, which is responsible for the situation. The appalling horrors of this hellish policy have not achieved their object, but have embittered moderate Irishmen."

Rob Irish Emigrants.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 19.—A new scheme which the police believe is intended by the Sinn Fein to prevent young Irishmen from emigrating to America and thus depleting the ranks of the Irish republican army was inaugurated here last night when armed men raided three emigrant boarding houses and seized the tickets and passports of a dozen Irish youths who were ready to sail on the steamer Carmania. The victims were ordered to return to Ireland immediately.

No personal injury was inflicted on the youths and no damage was done to the houses. The raids were carried out by large bodies of men.

B. Primack as "Henry Ford."

"HENRY FORD," impersonated by B. Primack, was a leading figure last night at a mask ball in the Coliseum, which was attended by thousands of Jews. Hoots of derision, born of the feeling engendered by the automobile manufacturer's attacks on the Jews, greeted the appearance of his "double." The Coliseum offered not an empty seat. Every available space not banned by fire department regulations was occupied by the crowd. The Jewish dramatist and poet, Sholem Asch, came from New York to take part. Hannah Taback of stage fame also was present.

2 HELD AS MAIL ROBBERS AFTER RUNNING FIGHT

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 19.—Two men believed to have robbed the mail car of the North Coast limited on the Northern Pacific of $300,000 were captured at Little Falls, Minn., early today, after a running revolver fight with deputy sheriffs.

A deputy and an alleged bandit were wounded. C. E. Strong, a mail clerk, was wounded when he attempted to resist the bandits.

The deputies in autos met the two men in the outskirts of Little Falls. The suspects opened fire when ordered to halt, and the gun fight lasted while the autos raced over a mile.

HOUSE AGAIN PASSES TARIFF; TO CONFERENCE

Easterner Fears Wool Section.

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Changing its mind today over the agricultural emergency tariff bill, the house rules committee reported a special rule for its consideration and the house, adopting the rule by 190 to 132, sent the measure to conference. Representative Green of Iowa led the fight to send the bill to conference, and the opposition forces were marshaled by Representative Treadway of Massachusetts.

Conferees appointed by the house were Representatives Fordney, Greene, Longworth, Henry T. Rainey, and Hull. They will meet with the senate conferees Monday on the return of Representative Fordney from Florida.

During two hours' debate on the rule members who spoke in favor of its passage were Green, Hawley, Campbell, Young of North Dakota, and Dempsey, Fess and Mann. Speeches in opposition were made by Representatives Pou, Garrett, Clift of Georgia, Treadway and Luce of Massachusetts and Oldfield.

Representative Treadway said passage of the emergency bill with a tariff on wool and no compensating duty of woolen manufactures would close every woolen mill in New England.

Sending the bill to conference next week makes the prospect brighter for final passage of the measure before March 4, but its opponents believe President Wilson will veto it.

NEW YORK BANK THEFT SUSPECT ARRESTED HERE

Chicago police are believed to have made the first arrest in the $145,000 bank messenger robbery in New York Dec. 29. John Tiernan, alias "Thompson," is being held at the detective bureau awaiting arrival of a detective from the district attorney's office in New York.

News of Tiernan's arrest was not made known until after he had been in custody a day. He was found at a rooming house in 302 South Lincoln street. According to the police he answers the description of the bandit who stuck a gun in the face of James MacKenzie, a messenger for the Chemical National bank, and made away with a satchel containing $141,000 in securities and $4,000 in cash.

Tiernan at first denied his identity, but a search of his clothes revealed him to be Tiernan. He said he had never been in New York, but later admitted that he had been there at the time of the robbery.

SENATORS CLASH OVER PLEA FOR CABINET HYPHEN

Harrison Scores, Gronna Defends Viereck Stand.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Senator Gronna of North Dakota and Senator Harrison of Mississippi had a bitter clash over German-Americans and other foreign born in this country in the senate today.

The subject came up in debate on the immigration bill when Senator Harrison objected to permitting relatives to be brought here from Europe.

"The papers reported the other day," Senator Harrison said, "that George Viereck, representing German-American societies, went to visit the president elect in Florida to ask a German-American member in the cabinet, and presented to him thirteen demands, among which was one for 'a liberal spirit in the treatment of immigration.' I'm for Americans without any hyphens, and that's what I want to see here."

Gronna Challenges Stand.

"I thought we had got past the period when any one could reflect on an American citizen because of the country from which he came," Senator Gronna replied. "In the western section of the country there are millions of American citizens who would not, if they could, be anything but American citizens; but they have the right to entertain a friendly feeling for the people of the countries whence their ancestors came."

Mustn't Humiliate Germans.

"I am not here to defend all German-Americans, but I am here to defend the German-Americans who are citizens of my state. They were among the first to go and ask for contributions for purposes incident to the war; they were among the heaviest contributors to the necessary funds. In my county, the head of nearly all organizations engaged in that work were American citizens of German blood.

"No American citizen will defend the outrages perpetrated by the autocracy of Germany, but I had hoped the time had come when American citizens of German parentage or origin who sent their sons across the ocean to fight the great war were no longer to be humiliated because they are descendants of Germans."

LARKIN TO ADDRESS K. OF C.

William P. Larkin of New York, supreme director of the Knights of Columbus, will be the principal speaker at a banquet tonight following the initiation of candidates for the De La Salle general assembly of the fourth degree at the Hotel La Salle. He was overseas director for the K. of C. during the war.

FRENCH POLICY ON RHINE FANS GERMAN HATRED

'Day of Revenge,' Hope of Embittered People.

correspondent's inqury, the more liberal attitude of the occupying authorities has not only prevented mortal enmity toward the invaders from permeating the mass of the people but has enabled trade with unoccupied Germany, across the river, to be carried on to a greater extent than up the Rhine, and has thus made the British and American areas more prosperous than those under the control of the French.

The territory on the left bank was closely connected before the armistice, in its economic relations, with the districts across the river. The coal deposits in the Saar, on the left bank, and in the Ruhr district of Westphalia, on the right, have caused industrial centers to spring up along both banks of the Rhine that interchange products and, according to German business men, owe their economic existence to the fact that the business organizations and enterprises on each side of the river are dependent upon and supplement each other.

Most of the metal working plants on the left bank, for example, draw their coal from the Ruhr on the right, while the half finished products of other factories are sent across the Rhine in normal times for final treatment. According to German official figures which were put before the allies at Brussels, the rail traffic in goods from the left bank of the Rhine to the right in 1913 aggregated 10,236,452 tons, while 13,996,027 tons were conveyed in the opposite direction. Traffic between these districts and foreign countries, probably France and Holland, amounted to rather less than one-quarter of these amounts.

A Problem in Economics.

In the occupied areas there are very few large businesses which obtain their raw material entirely from districts on the left bank and now also under occupation, and all the important industries in occupied territory have hitherto depended for their markets upon parts of Germany across the river.

These facts indicate the economic problem of the occupation which the French have sought to solve by linking up the industrial districts of the left bank with France and seeking to cause the trade of this region to flow to the west instead of the east. French efforts have not been successful, and officers of French missions who have been dealing with these delicate problems stated to the correspondent that British and American interference with their plans, especially in 1919 and the early part of last year, has been responsible for the failure they admit.

French Fail to Get Trade.

Owing to British and American pressure the French were prevented from stopping trade between the areas they occupied and the rest of Germany. There have been many and vexatious restrictions, of which the Germans complain bitterly, but which are probably inevitable under a military régime. But a great fair was recently held in Frankfort, at which the manufacturing and business interests of the area under French occupation were largely represented.

Under the treaty of Versailles, after a warm fight among the French and the British and American delegates, the Germans were permitted to extend to the occupied zones the laws of the German reich concerning foreign commerce. Many of these are not applied. In some cases French restrictions and decrees supersede them.

But both German and French informants agreed in telling the correspondent that French efforts to attract to France the bulk of Rhenish commerce have signally failed. The French efforts continue; there are missions in the Rhineland now trying to secure their revenge for the Rhenish exhibits at the Frankfort fair by organizing imposing displays from the Rhineland for the coming big fair at Lyons.

Upkeep Hits Germany.

Under the treaty of peace the German government is compelled to pay for the cost of maintaining the armies of occupation, now amounting, for all of the allies, to something more than 115,000 men. In an attached table are the German official figures as to the amount of this drain upon German resources. M. Loucheur, the minister for the devastated areas in the new Briand cabinet, has estimated the total cost of the occupation of the Rhineland up to May 1 of this year at 4,000,000,000 gold marks; This sum amounts to nearly $1,000,000,000 in American money, and at the present depreciated exchange to something like 75,000,000,000 in German paper marks.

In March of last year the World correspondent visited parts of the French area of occupation, including Mainz. In the ten months that passed between that visit and the present inquiry he found there had been a considerable improvement in food conditions. The population is still undernourished, but the French authorities have released many of their restrictions on transit to and from Germany. So far as could be seen, their administrators have made an honest effort to insure that the inhabitants of the Rhineland are at least no worse off than their friends across the river.

Germans Resent Exchange.

The quality of food is not good. There are still many substitutes used, and the bad war bread is the staff of life for most of the people. Meat in Mainz, Worms, and other larger German towns appeared more scarce than in the country districts of France, but the prices to the German lower classes are lower than in France, expressed in terms of the value of the mark, which is one-fifth that of the franc.

This method of calculation, the Germans claim, is very unfair, since German wages are paid in marks, and the relative value of the franc or the dollar has nothing to do with the privations of the people, who do not get enough marks to buy enough to eat. This objection is sound, but the correspondent believes that the interallied high commission has done much to alleviate distress.

Industrial conditions are not satisfactory. There is a vast amount of unemployment in all industries. But the same thing is true at the moment in England and France, as in America, and it is a delicate question to what extent the occupation and the difficulties of transit are responsible for a conditions that the Germans, of course, blame solely on the invaders. Shortage of coal is the principal grievance advanced by German manufacturers. Since transit facilities across the Rhine have been made easier they say they could do business in their old German markets to a great extent were it not for the relentless French refusal to let them have the coal they need to carry on.

Calls It "Boche Impudence."

The chairman of a French economic mission now in Mainz was asked for his reply to this statement, and Maj. Huguet replied:

"Only boche impudence would be capable of such statements. The Germans agreed at Spa to furnish us with 2,000,000 tons of coal a month and they are not doing so. We are actually paying their miners in the Ruhr in gold marks for coal that is not being delivered. And yet they shed tears of indignation and woe because we decline to permit all the coal these left bank manufacturers want to be supplied to the German manufacturers here, when we ourselves are short of deliveries."

French commissions decide how much coal German industries in the occupied area actually need to carry on, and where those industries are vitally important, an amount which the Germans regard as insufficient is permitted to be exported from the right bank. All the coal mined on the left bank of the Rhine, which is either in the Saar or in Lorraine, goes to France. German manufacturers contrast their lot in being kept short of coal with the happier fate of their friends in unoccupeid Germany, who get more coal.

Adds to German Hate.

The feeling of the Germans appears to have increased in bitterness during the ten months since the correspondent has passed through this area. This added hatred for the French is only partly due to the presence of colored soldiers. It appears in great part owing to the onerous regulations enforced by the French military tribunals and by the high commission at Mainz, which hamper and vex the movements and liberty of the inhabitants, as is inevitable under any military régime.

Many stories of the behavior of the French were heard. Most of these narrow down to the inevitable conflict of temperament between Frenchman and German. Some indicate, what the correspondent himself observed, the thorough dislike and contempt the French pollu has for the German civilian. This results in an attitude of intolerance and in frequent insults, and is in striking contrast to the situation down the river, where the Tommies and doughboys make friends with the inhabitants. The difference is simply that the Englishman and American regard the Germans as ordinary human beings, and the Germans, when so treated, turn out to be so.

Relates Specific Case.

Petty incidents of tyranny exercised by the French are related in thousands along the Rhine. One which the correspondent heard at first hand will suffice as a specimen. A German doctor, an inoffensive gentleman of standing in Darmstadt, who appeared incapable of insolence, declared he was called upon in the middle of the night to attend a patient suddenly taken ill in a village near the Rhine eight miles away. Darmstadt is not "occupied," but the village is within the French zone.

The doctor, while walking to the house, he said, met another man in the dark, who suddenly cut him across the face with a riding whip. He turned and saw his assailant was a French officer. He said nothing, went on and attended to his patient, but afterward visited the French commandant to lodge a complaint. The commandant listened and replied:

"You must know that all civilians are required to remove their hats to French officers."

The doctor answered: "It was too dark to see that the man was an officer, and, moreover, I have never been in the occupied zone before, but came here hurriedly to attend a patient, and am not aware of the regulations."

"So that you may not forget them in the future, I fine you 3,000 marks," said the commandant, and the doctor had to pay the money before he could go back to Darmstadt. Incidents of this sort, of which the correspondent heard many related, do not occur in the British or American areas, and in the French area help to keep alive the flames of hatred.

French Policy Often Changed.

Strictly speaking, the French occupied area has no local politics. Local officials and courts still carry on their functions, but they are in each case subject to the orders of the military administration and courts set up by the French. A discussion of political conditions means an anlysis of the policy of the French, which is exceedingly complex and has veered in several directions.

When Gen. Mangin took command at Mainz after the armistice he adopted an exceedingly conciliatory policy toward the natives. He even called the principal Germans to a conference and said: "We are here for military reasons, but we want to cause as little annoyance and disturbance as possible, and I propose to administer this region exactly as you want it administered, under plans which I shall ask you to prepare."

The general, describing the interview, afterward said: "They behaved like a lot of Central African niggers before a white mission. They cringed almost to the floor and kept murmuring, 'But it is what you want, general, that we wish to do.'"

Gen. Mangin Popular.

However that may be, Mangin made himself popular for four months until he was removed by Premier Clemenceau, apparently because the scheme he was instructed to further had broken down.

This scheme was the creation of an autonomous Rhenish republic, which should occupy the lands now under French, British, and American occupation on the left bank. The story of how the British and American military authorities refused to allow propaganda or a comic opera revolution to be staged has been told before.

After the failure of the Rhenish republic and the institution by the French of a more strict military régime, which did not take into account the susceptibilities of the Germans, French policy turned toward a rapprochement with the South German Clerical party. There were and are several contradictory influences at work in determining "French policy."

Marshal Foch and Gen. de Castlenau are Catholics, and it is said the attempt to come to terms with the Bavarian government and detach Bavaria from Prussia, which occupied many months in 1920 and has only recently collapsed, was stayed by the leading French soldiers. The Catholic party in France met with determined opposition all along from a group in the French foreign office, which realized the impracticability of this scheme.

Europe is now exercised because the local troops in Bavaria refuse to disarm. The correspondent believes the presence of these troops is due to the French policy in Munich last spring. Not only did France insist on sending a minister and opening diplomatic relations direct with Bavaria, but it is said in Paris in well informed quarters that the French actually encouraged the raising of Bavarian guards owing to the belief of the French staff and the Catholic party in the reëstablishment of Napoleon's pro-French "confederation of the Rhine."

It was hoped that Bavaria would secede from Prussia, in which case France, anxious to break up Germany, would encourage the formation of a group composed of Bavaria, Austria, and Hungary. And the existence of the Bavarian troops facing a disarmed Prussia would make it impossible for North Germany to interfere with the realization of such a program. The sentiment of German unity was too strong, and the Bavarians too anti-French for these plans to have any result.

Effect of Intrigue.

These plots and intrigues, which seem to have been those of generals and factions in France rather than of the whole French government, have had an important bearing upon conditions in the Rhineland. Most of the French occupied area consists of the Bavarian Palatinate. And, while the hope is not dead that before the fifteen years of occupation are over this left bank region can somehow be detached from Germany as soon as the scheme to break away Bavaria took root, French propaganda on the Rhine changed its tone.

Talk of a "buffer state" which should be friends with France and would be forgiven its share of the German war debt lapsed. The few renegade Germans who had held meetings under strong French military protection to defend them against their countrymen, in which they advocated a "republic" of which they were to be rulers, relapsed into the obscurity whence they emerged.

Hate the French Most.

During the last four months the inhabitants of the Palatinate have been told, by propaganda leaflets and through German speaking French officers apparently detailed for the purpose, that if Bavaria leaves Prussia the French armies of occupation will be withdrawn and the Palatinate can join up with the new South Germany. So far as could be learned, this propaganda has had no more result than the movement two years ago for a "buffer state." The fact that stands out most clearly in any investigation of political conditions on the Rhine is the amazing German national spirit which prevents the mass of the people from paying any attention to the most seductive promises made to them. It is no small bribe to promise a region under rigid military occupation for fifteen years and burdened with enormous debt that if it will take certain measures the occupying troops will be withdrawn and the debt forgiven.

Rhineland Hates Prussia.

The steadfastness of the German population on the Rhine cannot be due to love of Prussia. Prussia was never loved even before the war in the Rhine country, and is now hated as the cause of all the misfortunes that have fallen upon Germany. The firm attitude of the inhabitants, in the correspondent's opinion, is as much due to loathing of the French as to love of Germany. By their use of black troops, in particular, the French appear to have wrecked any chances they might ever have had of winning over the South Germans to a policy of disunion with Prussia and of reliance upon France for support. This hatred is the most vital force on the Rhine; the correspondent has also met with similar feeling in Ireland.

Everywhere the inhabitants whisper among themselves of the great day of revenge that perhaps not they, but their children, will surely see. Such do not talk of it openly to outsiders. But the utterances of one of the few Germans who would talk to an outsider on the subject faithfully represents the feelings of most of the millions now living under the rule of France. The man said, his whole face contorted by rage, in a sibilant whisper:

"When we get into France again we shall kill them all! All! Everything that lives!"

Alsace and Lorraine, so long a thorny problem for the German empire, are proving as thorny for the French liberators. This will be shown in the next article in this important series, which will be published tomorrow. Tens of thousands of sudden deportations by the French, Catholic objection to the "atheism" of French teachers, German sabotage, and other war troubles have combined to make serious discontent even among the inhabitants who hailed the change of allegiance.

INQUIRY SHOWS COST OF KEEPING ARMIES IN OCCUPIED REGIONS

The correspondent who conducted the inquiry in the Rhineland compiled the following table from the best available figures on the cost of the armies of occupation, German payments, and future costs. Compared with the dollar, the British pound is now worth $3.87, the French franc 7.20 cents, and the German paper mark 1.67 cents.

AMERICAN.
Cost to Sept. 30, 1920	$229,000,000
German payments	32,000,000
Future cost a day	80,000
BRITISH.
Cost to Sept. 30, 1920	£ 51,000,000
Payments, in marks	346,600,000
Cost this fiscal year	£ 3,600,000
FRENCH.
Cost to March, '20, francs	1,800,000,000
Est. for 1920, francs	1,258,287,000
German payments, francs	402,313,000
BELGIAN.
Cost to May, 1920, francs	265,000,000

M. Louis Loucheur, French minister of the liberated regions, estimates the total cost of occupation up to May 31, 1921, at 4,000,000,000 gold marks—almost $1,000,000,000.

The German payments are estimated to have totaled at least 8,815,396,000 paper marks.

Surface Navy Alone No Good, Fullam Says.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—The navy department today fought a hard battle with the critics of its building policy. Rear Admiral Fullam, retired, leading the critics before the senate naval affairs committee, delivered a sweeping indictment of the navy building program. He argued that the navy heads apparently had learned no lessons from the war; that they had shut their minds against suggestions based upon the experiences of world conflict; and contended that their attitude "imperils the nation."

The American navy today, he declared, is "fatally short of submarines," while its air force is "pitifully inadequate to meet modern conditions." He charged that the navy is "utterly disorganized," and bitterly assailed the theory of dividing the fleet, contending that the battle fleet should be concentrated in the Pacific.

Wants Shipbuilding Held Up.

Admiral Fullam urged completion of six superdreadnaughts now furthest advanced in construction, but held that construction should be suspended on five dreadnaughts less than 25 per cent completed and on six battle cruisers less than 10 per cent completed, while the navy makes a thorough study of what constitutes a modern navy in the light of the experiences of the war.

All the important bureau heads of the navy department were on hand to answer Admiral Fullam's testimony. Rear Admiral Taylor, chief of construction, maintained that the battleship was the backbone of the navy. It should be improved to the highest degree, he said, but should remain the navy's chief reliance.

Coontz Would Finish Ships.

Admiral Coontz, chief of operations, agreed with Admiral Fullam as to the necessity for developing the air service, but disapproved the proposal to suspend the construction of battle cruisers.

Capt. Craven, director of naval aviation, thought it would be advisable to create separate air service and urged that the development of air craft should be pushed to the fullest extent, but not at the expense of the capital ship.

Rear Admiral McVey, chief of ordnance, said no projectile yet invented can be dropped from a plane and do more than local damagee.

Admiral Fullam pointed out that the American navy now has sixteen dreadnaughts in commission and eleven superdreadnaughts under construction, six of which are between 25 and 90 per cent completed.

"It would appear good policy to complete these six ships, which would give a very powerful battle fleet of twenty-two dreadnaughts," he said.

Would Study Improvements.

"The five remaining battleships under construction are less than 25 per cent completed," he continued. "It would appear wise to suspend further construction on these five ships for at least six months, while it can be determined whether or not they may be obsolete in the near future or if changes in their design may be advisable. They might, for instance, be completed as airplane carriers, or they might be given armored decks to protect them from bombing. Inasmuch as we will have twenty-two dreadnaughts without these five, we may wisely wait six months. These ships are not needed and may not be needed in the future.

His attitude toward the six battle cruisers under construction was the same. He urged the completion of ten scout cruisers as soon as possible, and the utmost haste in completion of forty-seven submarines.

"We are fatally short of submarines," the admiral said. "There is not one long range, up to date submarine cruiser or mine layer in the navy.

"In our surface fleet we find that with 22 dreadnaughts, 300 destroyers and 10 scout cruisers our navy will stand next to that of England; it will be at least 30 per cent stronger than that of Japan, and, omitting Great Britain, it will be more powerful than the combined navies of all Europe. But a surface navy alone is a one idea navy. Such a navy is weak today and it will be weaker still in the near future.

Must Control Surface, Air, Depths.

"It must be evident that a modern navy will operate on three planes—the surface, above the surface, and beneath the surface.

"It is estimated that not less than $120,000,000 will be necessary to provide two modern airplane carriers, together with the bombing and torpedo planes, to place our naval air force in condition to operate effectively with the fleet in modern war. This is the approximate price of four dreadnaughts."

Reviewing the lessons of the world war, Admiral Fullam declared that the British grand fleet merely "blockaded Germany's surface fleet, while the submarines dominated the situation to the extent that it brought England to the verge of starvation."

"And now, in 1921," he continued "four years later, the navy department again goes back to the 1916 program, which did not provide ships to fight against Germany. It proposes to double the number of ships that could not fight submarines then and cannot fight them now.

Peril of Divided Fleet.

"Instead of crying loudly for more dreadnaughts and more men we should first prepare our existing forces for war. Sophistry alone can defend the present condition of our fleet. The two parts might be attacked and defeated in detail. The existence of the Panama canal is no defense for this blind policy. A few bombs may block the canal.

"This would be the first move of our enemy. Moreover, the united fleet of the United States should be stationed in the Pacific for the present. It is not needed in the Atlantic. We must learn immediately how to maintain the fleet in the Pacific. It is folly to say that our bases there are insufficient to maintain our fighting forces. If we cannot maintain it there now in time of peace how in the name of common sense can we hope to maintain it there in time of war?"

Aunt Em's Pancakes Lure Him Back to Illinois After 53 Years

It was the sour milk pancakes, the strawberry jam, and the coffee rich with cream right off the big pan of milk that brought Stephen Potter back to Illinois after fifty-three years of solitude in a cabin near Fort Benton, Mont.

Potter arrived yesterday at the home of Aunt Em Potter at Lake Corner, two miles from Wauconda, Ill. Aunt Em is the one who makes the pancakes which had made Stephen's mouth water for more than half a century.

Stephen went west during the days when "west" was a word that had a romantic glamour irresistible to the young man. He erected a log cabin near Fort Benton, digging into the hillside and building a façade of logs at the opening. He trained a favorite dog to precede him into the cabin. If the dog acted queerly he knew a rattlesnake was in his living quarters. But he could not forget those pancakes.

JUDGE REFUSES TO ORDER STOKES CHILDREN EAST

New York, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—The application by W. E. D. Stokes for an order compelling his wife, Mrs. Helen Elwood Stokes, to bring their two children here from Denver so they may be in jurisdiction of the court when his divorce suit is called for trial this week was denied today by Supreme Court Justice Ford. The court said the petitioner had an "ulterior" purpose in seeking the writ.

The Stokes children, James and Helen Muriel, have been at their mother's home in Denver for two years in her custody under an order issued by Judge Lindsey of Denver.

SON ARRESTED; FATHER KILLS SELF WITH GAS

Disappointment in the son he had often told his neighbors would "bring fame and honor to the family name" was more than Joseph Regal, 62 years old, a tailor residing at 1718 South Morgan street, could bear.

When his body was fourrd yesterday by another son, Frank, in the kitchen of their home, with a gas tube in his mouth, members of the family knew the story. He had taken his own life because of the disgrace he had suffered when the favorite son had been arrested Friday.

Regal's wife died some time ago.

STORK RECEPTION COMMITTEE TO DINE AND DANCE

Members of the Lying-in Hospital Alumni association — physicians and nurses who for years have been present at the harvesting of one-twentieth of Chicago's annual baby crop—will hold their annual dinner and ball at the Cooper-Carleton hotel Tuesday evening.

Approximately 50,000 babies are born in Chicago every year, and between 2,000 and 2,500 of these choose the Lying-in hospital for their landing place.

This year's ball is to be a Washington's birthday party. Two thousand invitations have been sent out. Last year the alumni raised $2,000 at the ball. The money was used to equip an X-ray department in the hospital.

At present the internes and nurses are breathlessly watching the battle which John Dumba, 2 weeks old, is making for life. His weight is one pound fifteen ounces. He is a game midget, and physicians say he has an even chance to grow as big as Frieda Simpson, an eleven pounder, who sleeps on a pillow a few feet away.

JUDGE ASSAILS POLICE CONDUCT IN POWERS' CASE

Four men held by the police as witnesses in the shooting of Policeman Thomas F. Powers by Policeman William Henze Wednesday night were released yesterday at a hearing on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus before Judge Frank Johnston Jr.

They are Simon Riordan, proprietor of the saloon in front of which the shooting occurred, Patrick Collins, the bartender, John Vogt, and Patrick Fitzgerald. Vogt and Fitzgerald were involved with Powers in a shooting affray at Clark and Erie streets last November.

In releasing the men Judge Johnston said that hereafter the police will always have to make a correct return giving reason for holding any person for whom a writ of habeas corpus is asked of him or that he will release them at once.

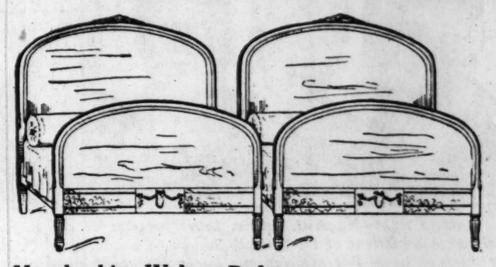
Scholle's Semi-Annual Sale of Good Furniture



Hepplewhite Walnut Bedroom Suite: Full Size Bed, Dresser, Dressing Table, Chifforobe, Stand, Chair, Rocker and Bench—8 pieces — Reg. Price $766.00 — Sale Price $383.00

Same Suite, 9 pieces, including Twin Beds — Reg. Price 896.00 — Sale Price 445.00

THE goods we are offering you in the semi-annual sale are all fresh Scholle quality goods; some of them the newest designs and the latest output of the factories that have made their reputation by making the best furniture obtainable, Scholle quality furniture.

Not only is it to your advantage to be able to buy such goods at present prices but you have the rather unusual privilege of returning any goods for your money or for other goods. There are none of the customary restrictions that apply in so many cases of special sales. These special sales of ours are only different from our regular sales because of a rather remarkable reduction in prices.

If we refused to give you all of the privileges of exchange or return of goods we could not hope to give universal and unquestioned satisfaction, and the disadvantages to you in such a case would, we think, offset some of the advantages. Your satisfaction is the best thing on which we can base our future.

CREEL WORRIED OVER PROBLEMS FACING G. O. P.

Tells Union League Club of Fears.

George Creel, who, as chairman of the wartime committee on public information, was often referred to as the chief press agent for the Wilson administration, is worried about the future of the Republican party. He told his fears yesterday to the members of the Union League club at the club.

"At the time of the armistice," he said, "with a ravaged world waiting to be rebuilt, with the industrialization of America at its highest points, with our agricultural development at the peak, and with our shipping restored to its old supremacy, we had the right to believe that America was entering upon a period of unparalleled prosperity. Today we find the factories closing, farmers desperate, wholesale disemployment, general wage cutting, and no market for our raw materials.

Victory May Be Defeat.

"Is any one so blind as not to see that these contrasts are already being painted in the minds of the people? Of a truth, before 1924 has been reached, the victory of 1920 may well prove to be the Republican party's most disastrous defeat. The racial problems that it created are its own problems.

"How will it meet the clamor of the Irish for recognition of the Irish republic? What will it do to assuage the wrath of the Italians? Will it give Thrace to Greece? How is it going to meet the expectations of Germany, Austria, and Bulgaria with respect to a peace that is to be as soft as thistledown? How will it live up to the expectations of allied sympathizers with respect to a peace as hard as iron and as sharp as steel?

"What will it do about taxes? The bills of the war have got to be paid. How will it answer the demands of employers that the necessary liquidation shall be made through labor? How will it meet the demands of labor that liquidation must be made through the profits of the employing class?"

Bright Lining of Cloud.

But, serious though it may be, the plight of the Republicans is not wholly hopeless, Mr. Creel admitted.

"We know," he reminded his hearers, "that it is from the bottom of the pit that the stars may be seen most clearly. And it is the hope of America—a hope that rises above partisanship—that Republican leaders may see these stars and climb to them. The whole government of the United States is in Republican hands for the next four years, and no one may wish evil to the Harding administration without wishing evil to our country."

Mr. Creel, who is in Chicago visiting his wife, Blanche Bates, co-star in "The Famous Mrs. Fair" at the Blackstone, will speak in Wilmette this evening.

URGE LAW TO STOP HANGING INSANE MEN

Left to right—Ralph C. Austin, Joliet, member of the executive committee of the Federation of Local Bar Associations of the Seventh Supreme Court district; J. Kent Greene, Chicago, secretary of the Federation of Local Bar associations; Logan Hay, Springfield, president Illinois State Bar association; Judge Perry L. Pearsons, Waukegan, president of the Federation of Local Bar associations; Judge J. D. Pope, Waukgan, member executive committee of the Federation of Local Bar associations, and R. Allen Stephens, Danville, secretary of the Illinois State Bar association.

14 Hanged; 8 Insane

Several hundred attorneys and a score of judges of the Municipal and County courts heard Dr. James Whitney Hall, alienist, and one of the county's insanity commissioners, declare yesterday that "the hanging of insane persons in this community is a travesty on the good name and intelligence of the public."

"I have reliable information," Dr. Hall continued, "that of the last fourteen persons sentenced to be hanged in the Criminal court of Cook county, eight were clearly insane, two at least were on the border line of insanity and the other four were not reported."

The declaration was made at a banquet tendered officers of the bar associations which are members of the federation of bar associations of the seventh judicial district by the Lawyers' association of Illinois. It was given in the latter's banquet hall in the City Hall Square building.

Dr. Hall urged the attorneys to push the adoption of an amendment to the present insanity statute which would deprive the superintendents of hospitals for the insane of the right of discharging patients at their own discretion and without an order from any court.

Other speakers at the banquet were Logan T. Hay, president of the Illinois State Bar association; former Gov. Charles S. Deneen, and Justice Chancellor, president of the Lawyers' Association of Illinois.

FALLS DEAD IN STREET.

John Bunk, 58 years old, 2416 West Twenty-fourth street, a laborer, suddenly collapsed in front of 2801 West Twenty-third street yesterday. Peter Libla, 2719 South Hamlin avenue, who saw the man drop, took him to a nearby drug store. Before a physician arrived the man had died, apparently of heart disease.

DYE FROM FURS INFECTS FACES OF 3 WOMEN

Health Commissioner Starts Inquiry

Three complaints from Chicago women that their necks and faces have become infected from skunk furs dyed various colors caused Health Commissioner Robertson to begin an investigation yesterday.

"I have always believed that all dyestuffs are germicides," Dr. Robertson said. "If there is a dye which is not a germ killer and which caused inflammation of the skin we want to know it."

Health department physicians diagnosed two of the cases as dermatitis or inflammation of the skin. Laboratory experts said that the painful infection was not due to the skin itself, but was apparently caused by the dye used.

In the two recent cases the infection was at first taken for anthrax. The face and neck of one of the women was so badly infected that she wore a handkerchief over the lower half of her face to avoid attracting attention.

"We traced one of tthe furs to the store of a loop furrier and the other to a west side department store," said James P. Kilcurse, chief of the bureau of food inspection. "The furs were of cheap grade and had been purchased from brokers. We have not been able to trace them to the manufacturer."

Dr. F. O. Tonney, head of the health department laboratory, was directed to take up the search for the pestiferous dye.

COUNTRY PUPILS DRAW LOTS FOR PIGS IN CONTEST

Ten children from Cook county schools went to the office of Edward J. Tobin, superintendent of the county schools, yesterday, and drew lots to see who should have first choice of ten thoroughbred hogs which are to be sold to them by the Duroc Breeders' association of Cook county. The children are to buy the pigs now from the association, and next fall prizes will be awarded to the owner of the best animal.

"The pigs will be sold to the children for about $200 apiece," said Superintendent Tobin, "and in the fall they may sell them back to the association for more money, and may also win prizes offered by the association of from $200 to $400 for the best pigs."

"We are doing this to interest people and encourage the raising of thoroughbred stock in Cook county," said H. R. Strauss, president of the Duroc Breeders' association.

Among the contestants present at the drawing today was Kathryn Fleming, 10 years old, Chicago Heights, who admitted that up to this time her interest had been mostly in music, but she added, "From now on I will be interested in pigs, and I expect to win one of the prizes."

Banker Drowned Skating Leaves Daughter Millions

New York, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Alfred Tredway White, banker and philanthropist, who was drowned Jan. 29, while skating at Central Valley, N. Y., left an estate of more than $15,000,000. The entire estate was left to the daughter, Mrs. Annie Jean Van Sinderen.

WANT TO LIVE ON $10 A MONTH? HERE'S THE WAY

Winnetka Man Doing It; Dines on Peanuts.

For Charles F. Schlieske, furniture man in Winnetka, the high cost of living has no terrors. Eggs may go back to 90 cents a dozen. Mr. Schlieske does not care. Beefsteak may climb far beyond the present price. Mr. Schlieske will only smile.

For the last twenty years his chief diet has been peanuts. And he has waxed fat. Yesterday he made public his daily menu. It is:

Breakfast.
Peanuts.
Cocoa. Whole wheat bread toast.
Luncheon.
Peanuts.
Bean soup. Rye Bread.
Half onion.
Supper.
Peanuts.
Half onion. Raw cabbage.
Fruits.

"I have not had a doctor for twenty years," said Mr. Schlieske at his home, 563 Lincoln avenue, last night.

Lives on $10 a Month.

"I eat everything raw except the beans, and I cook these. I have in my selection of foods everything that the average man needs. The caloric value of this menu is perfect. In the peanuts and the beans I obtain all the fats necessary. In the bread I have the proteids. In the onions I obtain salt. There is fat in cocoa. In drinking lots of water I obtain the other necessary minerals. The whole cost is $10 a month, and last month I saved $1.62! I am happy and contented."

"How do you do it?" he was asked.

"I am a bachelor," he explained.

"But Who Wants To?"

"And that is the reason," said Dr. Ben Reitman, of the department of health. "The chief object of eating is a variety. The married man likes a dainty salad that pleases his eye, prepared by a pretty woman. He likes a steak smothered with onions that tickles his olfactory senses.

"A hermit can live on a slim diet. In fact, Mr. Schlieske could live on $5 a month. He would manage to get everything necessary for the system. But who wants to live like that?"

DROPS DEAD AT WORK.

Anton Beck, 62 years old, of 2300 West North avenue, a tailor, died suddenly yesterday while he was working in a shop at 2209 West Chicago avenue, supposedly of heart disease.

GOODS OF LATE CZAR IN POLAND MAY BE SEIZED

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 19.—According to reports received in the London office of the American relief administration a proposal has been introduced in the Polish diet for the taking over by the government of all property in Poland belonging to the former czar of Russia and the royal family.

A government decree just issued declares that the president of Poland must be of Polish nationality and of Catholic faith. The Polish government has announced that a complete liberty of language and education will be allowed.

M. Kamocki, the president of the Polish-American society for the construction of railway cars, has just arrived in London from Warsaw. The cooperative society, of which he is the head, has 2,000 shareholders, and it proposes to engage in the construction of cars for the Polish railways on a considerable scale.

$75,000 "HERMIT OF LOOP" DIES OF FOOD POISONING

A hermit in the heart of the loop, B. W. Goodsell, died yesterday as he had lived—a man of mystery. He was worth $75,000 and owned the Goodsell Specialty company, but lived frugally, cooking his meals on an alcohol stove.

His home was a small rear room at the Morrison hotel. He was an inventor, and those familiar with his inventions say he was a genius. Most of them in recent years were motor accessories. He is said to have contributed more improvements to perfect the automobile than any man in America.

That he was ill was learned Friday night. A bellboy heard him moaning. Dr. F. W. Jiroch diagnosed the case as ptomaine poisoning. Goodsell at first refused to go to a hospital, declaring it was too expensive, and he had weathered other attacks of illness, but finally was induced to go to University hospital by Mr. Warner, a friend, who said he would pay the bill. He died there yesterday morning. He was 78 years old.

His diet was confined to canned food—soup, beans, peas, and concentrated beef extracts. A can of sardines was found opened. He had eaten some of them the night before and allowed the remainder to stand, consuming them for breakfast. They had become tainted, it is believed.

Relatives are being sought.

"Chicago's newest and most modern Women's Wear Store"

SON, 5, CRIES FOR FOOD; PARENTS HOLD UP STORE

Trapped by Money Orders, Pair Confess Raid.

Why a woman became a robber was recounted yesterday when Mrs. Elizabeth Crowell and her husband, George B. Crowell, were arrested for holding up the pharmacy of N. U. Masor at 856 Montrose avenue on the night of Jan. 29. They obtained $30 and two books of American Express company money orders. They were trailed through the money orders.

"What made you do it?" Mrs. Crowell was asked.

"Robert," she said pointing to her five year old son. "Robert was without shoes and clothes. That wasn't so bad, but we weren't eating regularly and he had to go to bed hungry. He would cry. That made me desperate."

Arrest Causes Collapse.

The Crowells formerly lived at 4725 Sheridan road. Crowell said he had been a salesman with a safety razor company at 20 West Jackson boulevard, but had been laid off because of slack business. He was found there yesterday by Detective Sergeants James B. Kerr and Harvey Guynn of the bureau. They arrested Mrs. Crowell in the lobby of the New Southern hotel, 1250 South Michigan avenue, where the couple had been living recently.

Mrs. Crowell collapsed. She begged the police to "see that Bobbie is well cared for, and don't tell him we've been arrested."

Clerk Tells of Robbery.

After Otto H. Lerps, clerk in the Masor pharmacy, had identified Mr. and Mrs. Crowell, he told his story. He was alone in the store at the time of the holdup.

"This man came in alone," he said, referring to Crowell, "and asked me if he could use the telephone directory. I said, 'Sure,' and he fingered it for a while, then asked, 'Do I use a nickel or a slug for the telephone?' I told him a slug. I turned to the cash register. I heard the command, 'Hands up.'

"I looked around. Crowell was covering me with a revolver, and signaling with his left hand.

"Mrs. Crowell entered. Crowell backed me behind the prescription counter. I saw Mrs. Crowell open the cash drawer and transfer all the money into her corsage. Then she went to the cigar counter and picked out some of our best Havanas. Then she left.

Wife Seeks to Take Blame.

"She called out 'All right,' as she closed the door. Crowell backed me over to a rear entrance and made me unlock it, then hurried out. They were the coolest pair of robbers you could imagine."

After Detective Sergeants Kerr and Guynn had arrested the couple they asked which one had conceived the idea of the robbery.

"I wish to assume full responsibility," began Crowell. "I——"

"No, no, George," Mrs. Crowell interrupted. "Listen," to the detective, "I'm as much to blame as he. I nagged him into it. I couldn't see Bobbie going hungry. I cashed a lot of money orders, too."

She was crying when the detectives left.

A TRAGEDY OF WANT

Mr. and Mrs. George B. Crowell, arrested yesterday after being trailed by stolen money orders, who confessed that, pressed by want and desperate, they held up and robbed a drug store together.

Robert Crowell, their son. Mrs. Crowell said she and her husband held up the store to get money to buy food for the child, as they could not bear to see him go hungry to bed and in tears.

REBELS IN INDIA RUN RIOT OVER VICEROY'S TRAIN

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Indian rebels attacked the special train of Viceroy Lord Chelmsford, near Allahabad, forcing the vice regal party to abandon its efforts to reach Calcutta, according to advices received here today.

The party left Delhi with the intention of going to Calcutta. As the train was approaching Allahabad, an important railway junction, 450 miles northwest of Calcutta, it slowed down. Almost immediately it was surrounded by hundreds of extremists, who swarmed over the locomotive and cars. They were driven off with difficulty, but the military escort deemed it advisable to return to Delhi.

Serious rioting in southern Calcutta is reported in a Bombay dispatch under Friday's date to the Exchange Telegraph.

Seven striking tramway drivers and conductors were wounded when the police, who had been called out to quell a fight between the strikers and Anglo-Indians who had taken their places, fired on the strikers.

AUTO KILLS BOY AGED 7.

John Malinowski, 7 years old, 2228 West Nineteenth street, was killed yesterday by an automobile owned by the A. J. Heinz company, 342 North Western avenue, and driven by John Maher, 4235 Hirsch street. The boy ran in front of the auto while trying to cross the street at Eighteenth street and Western avenue.

HARDING WON'T GAMBLE AT GOLF WITH LAME DUCK

St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Another projected classic of the world of sport went by the boards today when President Elect Harding declined a challenge from the postmaster at Greenville, S. C., to match skill with him on the golf links with a reappointment to the postmastership at stake.

To the challenger's manager, Mr. Harding wrote that he regarded himself as only a miserable player and was unwilling to "have the administration weakened by basing its attitude on my incapacity at golf."

But he added that he liked the postmaster's "sporty inclination."

WOMAN'S PARTY FINDS OLD LAWS NEED MENDING

Want Removal of All Restraints.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Still following the lead of Miss Alice Paul, whose policy triumphed to the last in the convention of the National Woman's party, the new organization which rose yesterday afternoon from the ashes of the party created to work for the federal woman suffrage amendment will begin at once the task of removing from all state and national laws any remaining discriminations against women.

Inequalities That Remain.

"We believe the first task is to secure equality before the law," Miss Paul said, speaking for the last time as chairman of the woman's party. "To that end we believe in passing a blanket bill through congress and each state legislature."

This policy, presented by the officers of the party, was indorsed almost unanimously.

Among these legal disabilities are cited the laws governing citizenship, marriage, divorce, guadianship of children, domicile, succession, property and contractual rights, jury service, the right to hold office, and discriminations in the civil service.

California Law a Model.

Miss Sue White of Tennessee, research chairman of the woman's party, said today:

"California has written into her fundamental law, as article XX, section 18, of her constitution: 'No person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession.'

"Such a provision should be written into the constitution of every state in the union."

TWO KILLED IN MEXICAN ROW.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 19.—Two men were killed and six were wounded on Chalchicomula hacienda, a ranch near Chihuahua City, yesterday when organized farm laborers fought with a group of free workmen who came to the ranch to work with them.

OIL COMPANY PROMOTERS HIT IN THREE SUITS

Henry Vette, head of a packing firm with offices at 220 North Green street, filed the praecipe of a $300,000 damage suit in the Circuit court yesterday against the promoters and agents of the Alto Gasoline and Oil Company of Texas.

At the same time two other suits were instituted in the Superior court by a score of Chicagoans asking that a receiver for the oil concern be appointed, the present trustees removed from office, and an accounting of the firm's resources made.

In all three suits the complainants assert that the oil company has been operating in a manner to deceive its investors. Mr. Vette, according to his attorney, Ernest J. Batten, also contends that the promoters owe the concern more than $1,000,000.

Attorney Batten stated that Vette had invested $115,000 with the Alto company.

VICTIM NAMES TRIO AS "BRAINS" OF BOOZE RING

"Mickey" Frank Tells of Paying $13,000.

Stung by memories of $6,000 lost in the maelstrom of Chicago's whisky traffic, Micky Frank, confessed link in the Heitler $200,000 whisky scandal, on the witness stand in Federal Judge Evans' courtroom yesterday pointed out the men who had "double crossed" him.

"I gave three men $13,000 for 100 cases of Old Grand Dad whisky," he said, "and I never received a drop of booze. All they done was to return $7 000 and threaten me with death if I squawked."

"Who were the men?" asked James R. Glass, government prosecutor. "Are they in the courtroom?"

"Yes," replied Frank in a voice that carried barely ten feet from the witness chair. "They are."

He pointed to "Mike de Pike" Heitler, "Mannie" Greenburg, and Robert Pearlman, the three men who are named in government indictments as the archconspirators in the liquor scandal.

Trace 1,000 Cases of Booze.

Before Frank was called government witnesses obtained by Assistant District Attorney Kelly and Walter G. Walker, special agent in the bureau of investigation, had traced 1,000 cases of whisky shipped to Chicago by a booze ring. They named Morris Gindich, one of the twenty-five defendants, as the "tool" who had manipulated the withdrawal permit.

They named Sergt. Timothy Judge as the police officer who stood by the "booze" car one evening last October and watched soft-handed workmen move 1,000 cases of whisky into waiting trucks. They told of diamonds flashing in the lantern light and of three cases of whisky distributed to cheer the help.

The government announced last night it will produce a witness tomorrow who will name saloon men who purchased the whisky and definitely connect up the "booze" car with Heitler, Pearlman, and Greenburg.

Frank Causes Sensation.

Micky Frank's appearance caused a sensation. The defendants, restlessly awaiting the week-end vacation, leaned forward, and such a buzz of excitement ran through the courtroom that Deputy Marshal Thomas Hennebry was forced to rap repeatedly for order before questioning could begin.

Frank said he lives at 551 North Clark street, where he runs a "coffee shop."

"What did you do before prohibition?" asked Attorney Glass.

"I had a saloon for twelve years."

"Did you buy any whisky lately?"

It was then Frank identified Heitler, Greenburg, and Pearlman as the men from whom he had purchased whisky. He said they were in his saloon Sept. 30 and wanted to sell him 500 cases of whisky.

Arranges for 100 Cases.

"Whom do you mean?" broke in Judge Evans. "Tell your story just as it happened, as if you were a phonograph."

"Well," continued Frank, "I told them I couldn't handle that much. They said they wouldn't handle less than 100 cases and I later arranged to purchase 100 cases at $120 a case."

Q.—Did they agree to protect you? A.—Yes; they said I would be protected against the police, the government; in fact, everything except crooked truck drivers.

Q.—When did you pay the money? A.—My brother paid it the next Tuesday morning.

Q.—Did you get the whisky?

Heitler Warns Him.

A.—No.

Q.—When did you next see Heitler? A.—At the Englewood police station. Capt. Ryan called me down there the following Sunday.

Q.—What did Heitler say? A.—He told me to keep still.

Q.—Did you make a statement to Capt. Ryan? A.—Yes.

Q.—What did Heitler do when he saw you talking to the captain? A.—Told me in Yiddish to shut up.

Q.—Anything else? A.—He drew his hand like a razor across his neck.

Frank ran his hand along his neck in imitation of Heitler.

Kirkland Cross-Examines.

Attorney Weymouth Kirkland cross-examined Frank for more than two hours.

Q.—What do you sell in this coffee house? A.—Near beer and coffee.

Q.—Did you sell any hard stuff? A.—No.

Q.—It is true, is it not, that you operate a disorderly house above your coffee shop? A.—No, I don't know what you mean.

Q.—What are your daily receipts? A.—About $60 or $70.

Q.—You make all that from soft drinks, do you? Is it not true that you operate a handbook in your basement?

"What do you mean by a handbook," queried Judge Evans.

"Explain to the jury what a handbook is," said Attorney Kirkland.

Frank grinned.

"It's a book used in betting on horse races," he said.

Q.—You have a nightly poker game in the hotel, do you not? A.—No.

Q.—If you did not sell whisky what did you want with 100 cases? A.—To speculate; I was only buying twenty-five cases.

Q.—Who got the others? A.—Two other fellows, Louis Greengard and my brother, Harry Frank, and a man called Kaiser.

Q.—What did they pay you? A.—Each gave me $3,250.

Attorney Kirkland then switched the questioning to events at the Englewood station.

Q.—Did you tell Capt. Ryan that you were afraid of Heitler after you say he threatened you in Yiddish? A.—No.

Q.—That's funny, isn't it? You were scared of him. Yet you did not object to being placed in the same cell at the police station. When did you tell the government about this deal? A.—A little later.

Q.—Did the government promise you immunity?

The witness equivocated.

Q.—Where did Attorney Kelly take you the first time they came for you? A.—They didn't take me. I was not there.

Deputy Marshal Hennebry had to rap for order. The jury laughed heartily.

A LITTLE LESSON IN MEAT ECONOMY

DOMESTIC science students in many schools throughout the state probably will be taught tomorrow the most approved methods of preparing a "boneless chuck" as a substitute for a rib roast. More than 100 domestic science teachers from various Illinois schools learned this "lesson" yesterday. Fred Gesell, beef expert at the Morris & Co. packing plant, was their instructor. The teachers also studied the modern cooking methods employed at the plant, where they were guests at a special luncheon.

"Everybody wants sirloin, porterhouse steaks and rib roast, while chuck steaks and pot roast go begging," Mr. Gesell said. "Lamb chops are 50 per cent bone and gristle, while mutton steak is 95 per cent nourishing lean meat. Discussions of living costs turn so invariably upon sirloin, rib roast and lamb chops, to the neglect of the cheaper cuts, that they become almost amusing.

"Man is a peculiar animal in that he thinks more of what goes into his mouth than what comes out of it. Therefore, ladies, we should take advantage of man's weakness and flatter his vanity by feeding him toothsome dishes which are easy to prepare and which add to the pin money housewives may have each week to spend."

'RIDDLE WOMEN' FOUND INSANE BY EXPERT HICKSON

Mother Sent to Hospital; Brother Saves Girl.

The final chapter in the death mystery of Mrs. Nancy Chamberlin was written yesterday. Mrs. Achsah Townsend and Miss Marian Townsend, Mrs. Chamberlin's daughter and granddaughter, were declared hopelessly insane by Dr. W. J. Hickson, head of the municipal psychopathic hospital, after a two hour examination.

Mrs. Townsend was committed to the psychopathic hospital for treatment. Miss Townsend was returned to Detention Home No. 1 at the request of her brother, Frederick James Townsend, and later will be taken to the home of her sister, Mrs. Esther Townsend Comstock of Santa Barbara, Cal.

Both women, according to Dr. Hickson's report, are suffering from dementia præcox. The physician found no evidence that Miss Townsend was under the domination of her mother—in fact, he said he found the girl's brain more affected than the mother's. It was only through the intervention of Miss Townsend's brother that she escaped commitment to the psychopathic hospital.

"The weakened mentality of both women is the result of their constant religious study and seclusion," Dr. Hickson said. "They have developed their intellectual sensibility at the expense of emotional development. Their brains are lopsided. They are abnormal in one way and subnormal in the other. In both cases the emotional brain cells have become atrophied through lack of use. Such a case is almost incurable.

"They are living in a self-created, purely imaginative world—a world devised within their own thoughts and fostered by their secluded habits of living. Both are demented."

MAYOR INFORMS B. J. ARNOLD HIS JOB'S AT AN END

Engineer's Way of Sticking Irks.

In a letter made public by his secretary yesterday, Mayor Thompson served formal demand on Col. Bion J. Arnold that he "cease to pretend to be chairman and a member of the board of supervising engineers." This is a board provided for by the 1907 traction ordinance on which the surface lines and the city both were represented. The board had charge of the bookkeeping arrangement under which the city received 55 per cent of the company's net divisible receipts and other fiscal matters.

The mayor contends that the 1907 ordinance is abrogated and that therefore the board of engineers created by it does not exist. The mayor stated his position to Mr. Arnold Jan. 27. However, the chairman continued to send the mayor notices of board meetings and this called forth yesterday's demand that the chairman quit.

Holds Board Does Not Exist.

"The board has ceased lawfully to exist, and no action by you, pretending to be chairman or a member of such board, or by any other person pretending to be a member of the board, will be of any force, effect or validity, especially with respect to the city of Chicago and its people for whom I speak."

The mayor warned Mr. Arnold that the city will no longer be responsible for its share of the board's expenses, and that the chairman will be held "personally responsible" for damages to the city through his acts as chairman.

Demands He Cease to Act.

"The city of Chicago hereby notifies you and demands that you do cease to pretend to be chairman and a member of the board, and to act as such," another sentence from the mayor's letter reads.

The mayor indicated that he does not intend to answer further letters from Mr. Arnold, and adds that in the last thirty days he has received more communications from the chairman than he had received from him heretofore in five years.

GOOD OF IOWA OUTLINES PLAN TO CUT TAXATION

More Economy; Repeal of Excess Profits Toll.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—How to reduce taxation, repeal the excess profits tax without any substitute therefor, and yet finance the government adequately in the next few years was outlined to me today by Representative Good of Iowa, chairman of the house committee on appropriations.

Mr. Good says it can be done by economy in government expenditures and by refunding the war obligations of the government over a long period, thereby avoiding the liquidation of the $4,000,000,000 Victory loan maturing in 1923.

Receipts Last Year.

Receipts of the government during the fiscal year 1920 were:

Customs (tariff duties)	$ 323,536,559.25
Inc. and excess profits taxes	3,956,936,003.60
Miscellaneous taxes	1,442,213,241.46
Miscellaneous receipts	981,728,633.32
Postal revenues	437,150,212.33
Total receipts, not including pub. debt	$7,141,564,649.96

Mr. Good estimated that government expenditures in the next fiscal year will approximate $3,500,000,000 and that with the excess profits tax abolished and no substitute provided therefor there will be $4,150,000,000 of revenue from the following sources:

Customs	$ 400,000,000
Income and corp'n taxes	1,500,000,000
Miscellaneous taxes	1,250,000,000
Miscellaneous receipts [not including int. on for'gn loans]	500,000,000
Postal revenue	500,000,000
Total estimated revenue	$4,150,000,000

Consumer Pays Profits Tax.

"Looking at the matter in a broad way," said Mr. Good, "it has seemed to me that if we do not by additional legislation take on new obligations in the way of financing activities heretofore financed by individuals or corporations, and if we do not take on additional government functions involving large expenditures, we should be able to keep the appropriations within approximately $3,500,000,000.

"An analysis of the receipts under the war revenue act will, I believe, show that by the repeal of the excess profits tax there will come into the treasury under the income tax provision alone $1,500,000,000 a year. My own opinion is that it will exceed rather than fall below that sum. Unquestionably the excess profits tax is in a large measure passed on to the consumer, and is one of the elements that have tended to keep living costs excessively high.

Sales Tax Is Opposed.

"There will mature within the next three years certificates of indebtedness, war savings stamps, and Liberty bonds of approximately $7,000,000,000. Shall we continue to lay this heavy tax upon American industry so as to pay this indebtedness within the next three years, or shall we refinance these obligations by loans rather than by taxes? I believe our taxes have become such a load upon industry that they are harmful when viewed from the standpoint of national production, and that these maturing obligations can best be met by borrowing the money with which to pay them."

Mr. Good opposes a sales tax and says if the Republican party should include a sales tax in the revenue revision it would "go down to humiliating defeat because the people of the United States will not stand that kind of a tax."

"How will the laboring man feel, while out of employment and with a small or with scarcely no income, if he is compelled to pay a tax on everything that he eats and that he wears?" he said. "Not realizing that the excess profits tax has been passed on to the consumer and that in the past he has been compelled indirectly to pay it, he will become bitter in his resentment at a congress that repealed a tax required out of excess of earnings only to substitute a direct consumption tax, which he must pay.

Tax on Transportation.

"It has seemed to me that we ought to repeal the tax on transportation, which last year yielded more than $252,000,000 in taxes on freight and passenger fares. That service is already taxed to the breaking point and these taxes should be repealed.

"Last year there was taken from bonded warehouses almost 40,000,000 gallons of spirits. These spirits paid a tax of only $2.20 a gallon. They were withdrawn for medical purposes, but were used for beverage purposes. We ought to restore the tax of $6.40 a gallon, and by so doing could add to our revenue from this source alone from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, depending upon the amount of the withdrawals.

"We have also a comparatively light tax on tobaccos, cigars, and cigarets, compared with similar tax levied in other countries. Last year we collected approximately $295,000,000 from this source. If we levied the same tax on this class of commodities that is levied by Great Britain and assuming that that tax would not materially interfere with the consumption, it would bring into the treasury more than $500,000,000 a year.

More from Motorists.

"Again, we have in the United States more than 8,000,000 passenger carrying automobiles. Practically every one is a luxury, and if we placed a tax upon passenger carrying vehicles and made the amount of the tax dependent upon the horse power, a reasonable tax, we could easily collect $200,000,000 from that source.

"It is estimated that next year postal receipts will bring in $500,000,000 and that the miscellaneous receipts will yield $500,000,000 more. During the last two years the government has sold a great deal of property, real estate, buildings, and equipment of all kinds, and we have more to sell. We have sold and will, I hope, continue to sell many of the merchant ships we acquired during the war. Certainly the miscellaneous receipts will not fall far, if any, below $500,000,000 a year. From these sources alone, therefore, we can foresee an income of not less than $4,150,000,000, which is $650,000,000 in excess of the appropriations as carried by the bills as they were reported to the house."

Mrs. Mary Potter of Dwight Will Celebrate an Unusual Anniversary.

MRS. MARY POTTER.

Bloomington, Ill., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Linking six wars, extending from the revolution to the late conflict with Germany, Mrs. Mary Potter of Dwight, who will celebrate her one hundred and seventh birthday anniversary next Wednesday, has a career that has no counterpart in the United States. Her grandfather, a soldier of the armies under George Washington; her father fighting against the British in the war of 1812; while she contributed supplies to the men who fought in the Mexican war, the civil war, the war with Spain, and finally the great conflict recently concluded, Mrs. Potter has a personal knowledge of the six struggles for liberty.

Mrs. Potter was born in Essex county, New York, in 1814, four years before Illinois was admitted to the union. She came to this state soon after it was admitted to statehood and has lived here since. When they gave land away to attract settlers, Mrs. Potter and her husband procured one of the grants from the government, a farm in Livingston county, and that tract is yet in her possession.

All but one of her children died from old age. The only surviving child is a son, Albert, residing in Peru, Ind. He and his children and grandchildren are expected to attend the celebration of Mrs. Potter's one hundred and seventh birthday anniversary.

Bituminous Coal Output Continues to Decline

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Production of bituminous coal continued to decline during the week ended Feb. 12 and for the first time since last April fell below the 8,000 ton mark. The total output for the week was 7,861,000 tons, far below the output in the corresponding weeks of 1917, 1918, and 1920, but almost exactly the same as that in 1919, when 7,770,000 tons were produced.

U. S. CAN'T KEEP SHIPPING DRY ON WET SEA: PAYNE

Charge Wooden Ships to War Loss, He Advises.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Secretary of the Interior John Barton Payne, who served for a time as chairman of the shipping board, told the Walsh investigating committee of the house in its final session today that the development of an American merchant marine could be better accomplished if a single official were in charge of governmental activities instead of the present board of seven members.

Mr. Payne also warned the committee that the United States never can compete with other nations on the sea if it forces prohibition on its passenger shipping.

Report Due Before March 4.

Today's hearing concluded the inquiry of the Walsh committee into expenditures of the shipping board. The final report of the committee will be presented to the house before March 4.

Secretary Payne expressed his view as to the future of the vessels owned by the shipping board and the future of the American merchant marine in general. He indicated that he saw no future at all for the wooden ships, and said they should be charged off as a war loss. He was optimistic as to the steel ships although criticizing the present form of organization of the shipping board.

Favors Private Ownership.

"I think it is imperative that the ships pass into the hands of private owners," said Mr. Payne. "I do not think the government can successfully operate ships in competition with private owners.

"I was greatly disappointed when the shipping bill contained provision for the abrogation of commercial treaties. We cannot build up shipping with a club. We have got to encourage good feeling. We are now a creditor nation with a balance of trade in our favor. We have a splendid opportunity to build up our foreign trade, but we must do it by the give and take method."

CLEAR BOLLING OF CHARGE.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—Winding up its eighteen months' investigation of shipping board operations, the select house committee headed by Representative Walsh issued a formal statement today holding that R. W. Bolling, brother-in-law of President Wilson and treasurer of the board, was "not guilty of soliciting or accepting any bribe, gift, or gratuity," as charged by Tucker K. Sands, in connection with a contract awarded by the board to the Downey Shipbuilding corporation.

Welty to Give Charges Against Landis Monday

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—The house judiciary committee today notified Representative Welty, Ohio, to appear before it Monday on behalf of his motion to impeach Judge Landis of Chicago.

(A Business Editorial)

AN OLD MAXIM

An "age-old" maxim is: "There are no buyers on a falling market." Disregard it. Some captains of industry—small and large—are more afraid than consumers. Give the people excess value for their money and it can be made the driving force of today's operations.

Following directly in line with our preceeding business editorials, we have bought, or placed orders, for large quantities of merchandise within the past three weeks.

The only pre-requisite of our plan of buying is, that with readjusted prices on all goods left over from last year, and new prices on new goods, the recent purchases must move out quickly.

All ought to do this. We hope all will. Permanent strength comes with lasting benefits for all rather than a few.

We shall not restate the fears some merchants and manufacturers have. There is always a possibility of realizing on fears. But we find an enormous amount of consumers' money in the country, ready to buy goods at attractive prices.

We ask manufacturers or jobbers in our lines to communicate with us at once if they need quantity orders to keep their plants going, or if they want to convert goods already made into cash. They must talk low prices, otherwise time will be wasted. The goods will be passed on to consumers on the same low basis. The fact is, as the public now knows, and has already taken advantage of, we have been doing this for the past five months.

Windows With an Individuality

Real Swiss Sectional Panel Curtains

In making the rooms of one's home cozy and comfortable it is very essential some careful consideration be given to the style and pattern of window curtains being contemplated. When one is entertaining friends it is strange, but 'tis a fact, the first thing to be noticed in the room is the window curtains and hangings; even though one spends thousands of dollars in the selection of their furniture and rugs, the room does not show any coziness or beauty until the windows have been properly curtained.

It is a pleasure to have one's friends make complimentary remarks as to the individuality shown in curtains which adorn the windows.

The woman who is in need of window curtains at present or will be in the near future should take the time to do a little curtain shopping as these prices for genuine Swiss goods are lower now than they will be when new shipments arrive.

These sectional panels are made in St. Gall, Switzerland. They are 8 to 9 inches wide, 2½ yards long.

M'CORMICK WILL TELL EUROPE'S WOES TUESDAY

To Speak at Medinah Temple Meeting.

For the first time since his return from Europe a month ago Senator Medill McCormick will tell of his experiences and impressions at Medinah temple at 8 p. m., Tuesday, Washington's birthday. The junior senator from Illinois went abroad last November to study the national political and economic problems. He has since reported to President Elect Harding on his observations.

Relief Workers in Charge.

The Medinah temple meeting has been especially arranged by the organizations working for the relief of the suffering children of Germany and Austria. The admission will be free, and at that time the public will have an opportunity to hear what America has had to do for the war stricken communities of Europe.

Senator McCormick will tell how he instructed the American service commission (the Quakers) to arrange for a Christmas celebration in one of the large orphanages in Charlottesburg, and other events that he sponsored in central Europe.

Will Act on Committee.

The following are some of those who will serve on the honorary committee at the meeting:

J. Ogden Armour, Charles H. Wacker, Chas. S. Deneen, Joseph P. Griffin, Theodore Gottmann, Judge Charles M. Foell, Frank G. Coe, Henry G. Zander, The Rev. R. A. John, C. S. Castle, Judge George Kersten, Fred H. Rawson, Herman Waldeck, Edward J. Brundage, Gustave F. Fischer, S. J. Rathje, Judge Theodore Brentano, William H. Rehm, Judge Harry Olson, Judge Charles A. McDonald, Dr. Otto L. Schmidt, James Hamilton Lewis, Judge Oscar M. Torrison, Judge J. H. Hopkins, Prof. Starr W. Cutting, Prof. Martin Schutze, Judge Kickham Scanlan, Le Roy A. Goddard, Miss Jane Addams, Miss Harriet Vittum, Mrs. Anna Wiebodt, Mrs. John Hetzel, Miss Caroline Ely, Miss Florence King, Former Gov. Frank O. Lowden, Felix J. Streyckmans, Prof. Hans E. Gronau, Dr. A. E. Bertling, Herman Wollenberger, George W. Lamb, Capt. Robert J. Fischer, Dr. Carl Beck.

THEY BATTLE ROBBERS

POLICEMAN GEORGE HESPEN of the Marquette station was preparing to retire in his first floor apartment at 2020 West Twenty-first street last night when he heard the sound of breaking glass. Across the street, at Frank A. Rose's pharmacy, three men were carrying out a case of whisky.

Mr. Hespen leaped from the window in his pajamas and opened fire with his revolver. The three men returned it. Mr. Hespen emptied his revolver, then called to Mrs. Hespen:

"My bullets are in my pants. Throw me my pants."

Mrs. Hespen thoughtfully extracted the bullets, which were in a box, and tossed them to Mr. Hespen, who reloaded and dashed across the street. Policemen Cahill and Sutter happened along and joined him.

The three men fled. The policemen entered the pharmacy and found Earl McMahon, 1648 Arcade place, hiding behind a counter. He surrendered.

Mr. Hespen returned to his home, dressed, and conducted McMahon to the station. He would not talk.

CASHIER FIGHTS THREE ROBBERS AND SAVES $2,800

A spectacular battle was fought when William P. Wisehart, cashier for the Prudential Life Insurance company at 1583 Ogden avenue, yesterday resisted three men who tried to rob him as he entered the office of the company with a $3,000 payroll. During the battle, which was waged by Wisehart with his bare fists, one of the men, Irving Potts, 32 years old, of 2442 West Monroe street was captured. The other two men escaped with $200 of the payroll.

At the Desplaines street station more than $150 was found in Potts' overcoat.

Four armed men encountered the police after they had entered the saloon of Anthony Radochofski at 4342 Archer avenue. They robbed the proprietor of $83 and after leaving the place fought a revolver duel with Detective Sergeant John Floop of the New City station.

Mrs. R. A. Waller's Will Leaves College $10,000

Lexington, Va., Feb. 19.—Washington and Lee university has received a bequest of $10,000 by the will of the late Mrs. Lina B. Waller of Chicago. The bequest is made in memory of Mrs. Waller's husband, Robert A. Waller, who was a student at Washington college, now Washington and Lee university, for five years immediately after the civil war, when Gen. Robert E. Lee was president of the institution. Mr. Waller was formerly controller of Chicago.

PLAN TO MARKET GRAIN APPROVED BY FARM BUREAU

Rapid work is being done to develop the National Sales Agency plan of marketing grain adopted by the farmers' grain marketing committee of seventeen, which returned to Chicago yesterday after a five day convention at Kansas City. Soon after the committee arrived it was told the American Farm Bureau federation's executive body had approved the new plan of selling and distributing grain in the United States.

C. H. GUSTAFSON. [Photo Copyright: Moffett.]

As soon as necessary details are worked out the plan will be presented to farmers of the various states for ratification, according to C. H. Gustafson, chairman of the grain marketing committee.

The constitutionality and legality of the final plans are to be passed on by leading attorneys, including such men as former President William H. Taft, and Charles E. Hughes.

OVE LAUGHS AS 821 MILE WALK ENDS WITH CELL

Marine Deserter Nabbed; Girl Will Wait.

It isn't so bad to be in jail if there is a girl outside who loves you. This is the philosophy of Edward T. Young, 21 years, old, of 2759 West Forty-seventh street, a prisoner. And Bernice Radtke, 20 and pretty, of 5037 Indiana avenue, who walked all the way from Philadelphia with him, heartily agrees.

"Do I love him?" she asked with a smile. "I'll tell the world I love him. A woman doesn't walk 821 miles, from Philadelphia to Chicago, with a man she doesn't love."

Young and Miss Radtke were arrested here yesterday by agents of the department of justice. Young is held as a deserter from the marines. The girl is out under $5,000 bonds as a witness against him.

She Never Complained.

"Let me tell you something," said Young in his cell. "There are only two kinds of women—Bernice and the rest. At Philadelphia, when I said 'let's go,' I had only $1.75.

"But did she, like most women, say 'cushions or nothing'? She did not. It was tough for her, I know, but she never complained during the whole journey."

At her home Miss Radtke was just as optimistic as her sweetheart.

"It is too bad our long journey should end in this manner," she said, "but I'll wait for him a lifetime if needs be."

But there was one subject Miss Radtke did not like to talk about—that walk.

"'Why discuss that,' she said. 'All I want to do is forget it—there was no excitement.'"

Young admitted he had deserted the marines at the Philadelphia navy yards. He and Bernice decided to return to Chicago, and they walked because they didn't have any money.

Edward Stars as Provider.

Then how did they eat en route? "Edward provided that," the girl said, and with a sly smile Edward admitted it.

"There was one time I was sure I was going to get pinched," he said. "It was early one morning, after we had spent the night in a police station—as guests. I saw a bottle of milk on a front porch. The temptation was too much. I took the bottle. A woman screamed and I took it back. Then I told her about Bernice. She gave me enough breakfast for two and didn't call the police."

TRUE LOVE

They Walked 821 Miles Together from Philadelphia to Chicago with Never a Row; Now He's in Jail as Marine Deserter.

Edward P. Young and Miss Bernice Radtke.

TEACHERS ACT TO KEEP SCHOOLS FREE OF REDS

Will Establish Courses in Americanism.

To keep the little red schoolhouse free of the Reds, officials of the American Federation of Teachers, in session here yesterday, voted to establish courses in Americanism for all teachers. Communist and I. W. W. agitators are disseminating propaganda throughout the country, particularly in the rural districts, it was said.

Charles B. Stillman, president of the federation, declared the radicals were preaching that the public school systems of the country are controlled by autocracies, determined to eliminate democracy. He also decried the strike as a weapon of moral suasion.

"Our nonstrike policy is proving successful," he said. "Radical superintendents are the allies of the I. W. W. and simply play into its hands. The wobblies are telling the rural school teachers they are helpless as they stand today. We will combat that by showing that almost one-half of the school superintendents of America have democratized their schools within the last year."

Arbitrary dismissal of teachers was blamed by him as one cause of unrest among them.

Electrocuted on 'L' Track, Then Run Over by Train

UNION PRINTERS SEEK ARBITER ON $4.65 WAGE CUT

Job Shops Act Under Cost of Living Compact.

Cost of living will be meat for discussion when Typographical Union No. 16 meets this afternoon to take up the cut of $4.65 a week in job printers' pay, which Franklin division of the Franklin-Typothetæ of Chicago, embracing the union job printing shops, proposes to put into effect Feb. 25. Arbitration will probably be proposed by the union.

To the outside observer, the most interesting feature is the sliding scale experiment, whereby wages are increased or decreased as cost of living goes up or down. Under the contract between the printing trades unions and the union job houses, made in August, 1919, provision is made for wage adjustments every six months on the basis of the index number of living costs issued by the United States bureau of labor statistics.

So far, when adjustments were made, high cost of living was still climbing. Thus in February, 1920, the index number having climbed from 174 to 197, the men got $5 a week raise. Again in August, 1920, the index having jumped from 197 to 215, another $5 a week raise went into effect. This time, however, the index number for the six months' period dropped from 215 (June) to 202 (December), and the employers, in reporting their case to the unions, declare the tumble entitles them to reduce wages $4.65 a week.

Will It Work Both Ways?

The employers figure the drop in the index number actually entitles them to a decrease of $6.09 a week in wages. But bonuses granted in past adjustments amounting to $1.43 a week are kept in effect, and the average spread decrease is put at $4.65.

The question now, as the employers view it, is whether a sliding wage scale based on fluctuations in cost of living works as well coming down as going up. They argue, too, that the job printing plants are almost 40 per cent idle, that the present market is a buyers' market, and that production costs must be reduced if products are to be sold at prices that will bring back business.

Willing to Arbitrate.

The unions and the employers are still negotiating over the wage question. Several joint conferences have been held without agreement, and today the printers will thrash over their side of the case. One point on which many of the men are laying stress is that of excessive rents, which in some cases have wiped out any apparent drop in living costs as indicated by the government's index numbers.

Union officials say the organizations will be ready to take a fair adjustment if it should be shown that an adjustment under the terms of the contract is really required. Their attitude is that they are willing to arbitrate.

HOWAT DEFIES ALLEN TO A TEST AT DIGGING COAL

Pittsburg, Kas., Feb. 19.—Alexander M. Howat, replying today to a statement made at Salina yesterday by Gov. Allen that the president of the Kansas miners' union might soon "be doing some useful work for the state in the coal mines at Lansing," challeged the governor to a test of ability to dig coal.

"I'll dig four tons of coal to his one, and the one who backs out first must agree to leave the state," said Howat. "I am getting tired of having Gov. Allen go around the state telling the people what a wonderful thing his industrial court is and what a soft job I have and how I sponge off the workmen. Now is his chance to prove I am useless."

Newsboys' Protective Union Gives Dance Today

The eighth annual reception and dance of the Chicago Newsboys' Protective union, Local 14567, will be given today and tonight at Carmen's hall, Ashland avenue and Van Buren street. Professional dancers have been engaged to entertain.

During the intermission there will be a contest for all kinds of amateur dancing for which cash prizes will be given, the professional dancers acting as judges. Moving pictures will be taken of the contest.

Quincy to Be First City to Create Health District

Quincy is to be the first Illinois city to avail itself of the state law which permits cities to create health districts and levy a special tax of 2 mills for its support, according to Health Commissioner Robertson, who conferred with Quincy city authorities on Friday.

HOTEL WOMEN TO ORGANIZE.

With the idea of helping Chicago hotel men to give the public "the best service in the world," the hotel women of this city will meet at the Hotel La Salle on Wednesday evening for the purpose of forming the Hotel Women's association. "The day has come, we realize, when woman's work in the hotel world is distinct and important," says A. C. Bray, assistant manager of the Sherman hotel.

BAPTIST CHURCH CORNERSTONE TO BE LAID TODAY

THE REV. W. E. BIEDERWOLF.

The North Shore Baptist church cornerstone will be laid this afternoon at 3 o'clock by the Rev. William H. Jones, minister, assisted by S. M. Seator, architect of the new church and chairman of the building committee. The Rev. Carl D. Case, D. D., of Oak Park, will be the speaker at the cornerstone laying at Lakewood and Berwyn avenues. Beginning on Tuesday, a series of days of evangelistic meetings will be held in the North Shore Baptist church at Leland and Racine avenues, under the leadership of the Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, D. D., evangelist, who has just returned from a tour around the world, including Japan and Corea.

RAILROADS AND LABORERS WILL CONFER ON WAGE

An armistice in the battle of words being fought between the American Association of Railway Executives and representatives of the railway brotherhoods was called yesterday after the offensive of the day before on the part of the executives.

The next move is expected to be in the direction of wage cuts for unskilled labor. The executives were informed at their meeting on Friday that the initiative had reverted to the individual railroads, and now, as planned and announced a week ago, the procedure will be for the individual roads to call wage conferences with unskilled labor. If contemplated reductions are not accepted by the men, then the question can be taken before the labor board in the shape of definite controversies between the employes and the managements.

Common Labor Only Hit.

This action, it is pointed out, is directed at common labor only, the position of the roads being that they should have the right to hire unskilled labor at the rates prevailing in the various localities served by the carriers individually.

The labor board itself has not acted on the suggestion made by B. M. Jewell, head of the railway employes' department of the American Federation of Labor, that joint conferences be called between the roads and the unions to adjust differences over national working agreements. The executives turned the idea down Friday. Whether the labor board will act on the suggestion is problematical.

The executives took the ground Friday afternoon at a meeting at the Drake hotel that the railroads must be allowed to deal individually with their labor themselves. They flatly declared that collective bargaining on a national scale, the objective sought by the unions, was "incompatible with efficient and economical operation of the railroads."

The labor leaders, led by Mr. Jewell and Attorney Frank P. Walsh, are preparing extensive rebuttal arguments.

Roads Plead Their Need.

Unless the railroads are able to obtain the passage of measures by which they may reduce their expenses materially they will be unable to face imminent financial trouble, according to Gen. Atterbury, who is spokesman for the executives.

Excessive labor costs and the relatively small amount of business being handled by the carriers are given as the causes of the financial stringency of the roads. With the summer season rapidly approaching, when labor is hired in the numbers, the executives are fearful of possible bankruptcy for many lines if they do not obtain the right to bargain for the labor they need and are required to pay stipulated prices as at present.

Says Conditions Grow Worse.

That the financial situation of the roads is worse now than it was when Gen. Atterbury appeared before the railroad labor board is the opinion of Samuel O. Dunn, editor of the Railway Age.

"The railroads should have earned in December on a 6 per cent basis a net return of about $87,000,000," he said. "They actually earned only about $17,000,000, or at an annual rate of 1 1-3 per cent."

No Mail Deliveries to Be Made Tuesday

General delivery will be the only mail service given at the Chicago postoffice on Feb. 22. The office will be open from 8 until 10 o'clock in the morning. No deliveries will be made. There will be, however, one collection from all boxes during the holiday. The mail from this collection is scheduled to reach the postoffice about 10:30 p. m.

SMALL CERTAIN SMITH WILL BE UTILITIES CHIEF

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Frank L. Smith, Dwight, barring circumstances now unforseen, will become chairman of the state utilities commission immediately after March 4, when his term as member of congress from the Bloomington district expires.

This was made plain today by Gov. Small as he was boarding a noon train for Kankakee and Chicago. Col. Smith conferred with Gov. Small for many hours last night.

It will not be surprising if one of the first actions, following the seating of Col. Smith, will be an order to reestablish the 5 cent fare as the authorized street car rate in Chicago. That such a step would be followed by prolonged litigation is expected. The order, however, would be deemed definite delivery on one of the campaign pledges made by Gov. Small and by the city hall organization.

Just when the nickel fare would become operative would be a matter for the lawyers and the courts to work out

Why Your Next Car Should Be an Oakland

A brief review of the important advantages to be found in this low-priced, sturdily built and exceedingly economical motor car

IN the past few years the one conspicuous tendency in the automobile business has been toward the well-built, serviceable, and light weight six-cylinder car.

Public and manufacturer alike have recognized this type of car as best suited to the general need for pleasant, reliable and low-cost personal transportation.

As far back as six years ago, Oakland seriously undertook the production of an automobile of this kind.

Without interruption since, it has concentrated its energies on refining and improving its original model—a model that was basically right at the start.

More Power in the Oakland

Today the Oakland Sensible Six car is in our opinion without rival in the world in point of combined efficiency and low cost.

Its engine is of overhead-valve design—a design clearly demonstrated as superior by its use in all airplane and racing car engines.

The Oakland engine delivers more power than others of similar size because its overhead-valve cylinder is the nearest possible commercial approach to the ideal combustion chamber.

Quick burning of the fuel, small area for heat losses, unobstructed passage of gases, and machined all-over surfaces further enhance its efficiency.

As a result, the Oakland owner gets more miles per gallon of gasoline, more power per pound of car weight, quicker getaway, easier hill-climbing and greater flexibility, than are available in any other car at anywhere near the Oakland price.

The Simple and Rugged Chassis

The foundation of the Oakland chassis is the powerful 6½-inch-deep steel frame.

Reinforced by four very heavy cross-members, it forms a stout and rigid support for the body that will not weave or sag.

Every detail of the Oakland chassis is similarly strong and lasting, from the drop-forged steel spring-hangers to the precisely cut transmission gears of special tough alloy.

Feature after feature of advanced design is included in its structure, such as the non-lubricating, self-cleaning brake assembly, or the special steering system, notable for its positive and easy action.

Roominess a Body Feature

Due to the compactness of the Oakland engine, the Oakland Sensible Six open car has the roomiest body for its wheelbase of any automobile built.

This body is of the composite type, being constructed of enduring metal over a strong wood frame.

It is built by Oakland in Oakland's own plant, entirely hand-painted in Oakland shops—where every detail of its finish is under close supervision.

Like every body in the Oakland line, whether closed type or open, it is made heavier and stronger than is actually necessary.

The Resources Behind the Oakland

We have attempted to tell you briefly here why your next car should be an Oakland.

Perhaps the chief reasons are as yet unmentioned—the record of the car itself and the company behind the car.

In the six years we have been building the Oakland Sensible Six, more than 200,000 of these cars have gone into the service of owners.

Uniformly, these owners report performance of the most reliable character, with returns of from 18 to 25 miles to the gallon of gasoline, and from 8,000 to 12,000 miles on tires.

Thus the Oakland car of today is a known quantity, a stabilized investment—its worth has been established beyond doubt or question under the conditions of actual use.

The Company that builds it is an important unit of the General Motors Corporation, the largest automobile producing organization on earth, and is itself the seventh largest producer of automobiles in the world.

Every Oakland car reflects the policy of this Company continually to embody in its product the latest accepted engineering practice.

When may we demonstrate the Oakland to you?

YANKEE OR JAP? UP TO ENGLAND TO PICK FRIEND

U. S. Writer Tells of British Dilemma.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921 By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Feb. 19.—"The New Japanese Peril" is the title of a sensational book by Sidney Osborne which has just been published in England and which will soon be published in America. Mr. Osborne is an American who already has written widely on Japanese subjects and also on international politics. In his latest book he declares that Great Britain will be forced, within the next few months, to choose either Japan's or America's friendship.

Mr. Osborne said that Japan played a double role in the war. Had the conflict to end in a draw, he declared, Japan would have been able to play the part of umpire at the peace conference, and would have insisted upon her demands for the control of China and on equal treatment in America, Canada, and Australia.

When Japan Got Busy.

He points out how Japan took advantage of the preoccupation of Europe and America with the war to grab concessions in China, and, by means of secret treaties with France, Russia, and Great Britain, to secure advantages to which she was not entitled either by right or by virtue of her help in the war.

Mr. Osborne is none too friendly toward Great Britain, but he sees where British and American interests coincide. He declares the principal result of the war has been to secure for Great Britain the undisputed hegemony of the world, and says "the United States might have had it had President Wilson been able to stick to his original program and the fourteen points.

Wilson Proved Easy.

"But British diplomacy and statesmanship, made wise by handling just such problems for centuries past, understood how to organize effective opposition against President Wilson's proposals, and when the peace conference met the American leader did not have long to wait before he discovered his plans were being undermined in every direction.

"It was not a difficult task for Great Britain's trained diplomats to play upon French credulity and fears and to hold Italy by leading strings because of the latter's financial and economic dependence on England and her hopes to secure Great Britain's support for her aspirations in the settlement of the peace problems.

The Mandate Idea.

"The mandate idea was taken over by England and cleverly adapted to suit her own projects. The Monroe doctrine was likewise treated to a dose of British medicine. The president emerged from the ordeal much weakened in health."

Writing on the Anglo-Japanese alliance, Mr. Osborne says, "At the present writing it seems altogether unlikely that the treaty will be renewed. For Great Britain is beginning to have some doubts as to the wisdom of her policy which, though successful in weakening Russian and German influence in Asia, created in their stead a far more dangerous opponent to British power and prestige on the Asiatic continent than the others ever hoped to be."

Discussing the various possible future combinations, Mr. Osborne suggests, as being most certain of success, one between America, England, Germany and Russia to control the trade of the world in the event that all present alliances are terminated, and, in the event of the failure, to secure a close Anglo-American understanding. He deems an understanding between England and the United States most desirable.

The whole book is really in the nature of a warning to Great Britain. In one of the most important passages Mr. Osborne says, "From experiences with Japan since the signing of the 1911 treaty, and particularly during the war, Great Britain perceives that she is probably again face to face with the question, not from choice, but from necessity.

"It is a question as to whether to choose the friendship of Japan or the friendship of America. It would seem absolutely impossible for Great Britain to have the friendship of both countries at one and the same time. Accordingly she must make her choice, and upon that choice, the most momentous one she has ever been called upon to take, depends the entire future of the British empire."

CITY WILL SUE RAILROADS 'LIKE 10 CENT DEBTORS'

Blame for the cessation of work on the Roosevelt road viaduct was laid at the doors of the Chicago and Western Indiana and Rock Island railroads yesterday by Assistant Corporation Counsel Leon Hornstein, who said that the roads have failed to make payments of their shares of the cost of the viaduct to the city.

At the direction of Corporation Counsel Ettelson suit will be begun next week in the Municipal court against the two roads for a total of $108,496.26, Mr. Hornstein said.

"These roads have strung the city along since last September," Mr. Hornstein said. "They will be sued in the Municipal court just like a common 10 cent debtor."

The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Santa Fe and Grand Trunk railroads, which are also bound by agreements to pay shares of the viaduct's cost, have paid first installments and will not be sued though second installments are already slightly overdue, Mr. Hornstein said.

Oil Manager, Sent East, Weds, Takes Bride Along

Emmet McQuillan, sales manager of the Franklin Oil and Gas company, on orders from his company packed up yesterday to move to Dayton, O. After making a checkup of his possessions he decided he might as well take a wife along, too. So at 3 o'clock he married Miss Lillian Shorrette of Dixon, Ill. The ceremony was performed at the home of Mrs. Mary Fox, 1901 Newport avenue. Mrs. Fox, W. G. Young, and Mrs. Young were present. The newlyweds departed for Dayton last night.

THE BANK OF KINDNESS

Draw a Check on It for the Unfortunate.

BY REV. G. A. MAC WHORTER.

This little dark eyed beauty was rescued in a dying condition on the streets of Constantinople by Miss Maria Jacobson, for fifteen years a Danish missionary nurse in Asia Minor. The child resembled a little animal rather than a human being, had forgotten how to laugh, to cry, or to play, and remembered her name with difficulty—"Beatrice Arsholovis Dinghalian"—the middle part meaning "Dawn." Her father, an Armenian, was slain by the Turks and her mother was carried away to a Turkish harem. Miss Jacobson adopted the little "Beatrice Dawn," and she is now with her foster grandparents in Copenhagen.

BEATRICE ARSHOLOVIS DINGHALIAN

Miss Jacobson, "the Danish heroine of the war," has worked for six years in the Near East relief, and will tell the story of her experiences, particularly in Armenia, at the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall at 3 o'clock this evening.

WOMAN, 72, PITIES 'HUNGRY' MAN; HE TIES HER TO POST

Mrs. Mary Bechauer, 72 years old, 3102 North Leavitt street, early yesterday "went to the cupboard" to get a poor man a bone, some bread, and anything else that might appease his hunger, which, he said, prompted the visit.

When she returned, the man brandished a revolver, took a rope from his pocket, and bound her to a bed. She fainted. Alarmed, he fled without ransacking the home. Mrs. Bechauer regained consciousness and released herself. The police are looking for a roughly dressed man about 23 years old.

"SONNY" ESCAPES LAW ONCE MORE; JURY DISAGREES

William ("Sonny") Dunn slipped through the fingers of the law again yesterday when the jury in Judge McDonald's court reported a hopeless deadlock. The jury was discharged and prosecutors launched plans at once for a new trial within the next ten days.

Dunn returned to the county jail smiling. He has treated the latest prosecution, in which Special Prosecutor Stephen Malato sought to return him to the penitentiary for "gun toting," as a joke. His counsel, former Assistant State's Attorney James C. O'Brien, declared that his client will be ready to go on trial again just as soon as the state can get a date set.

1,000 CASES OF WHISKY SEIZED BY DRY AGENTS

One thousand cases of whisky consigned to Louis Ottenheimer & Sons, at 174 North Michigan avenue, were seized by Joe Callahan, chief of the dry squad, yesterday when word was received from Kentucky that the tax had not been paid on the liquor prior to Jan. 28. The liquor was first detained last Monday.

Frank D. Richardson, dry chief, announced last night that forty prohibition agents sent from Illinois to clean up southern Indiana had seized a quantity of whisky. Details of the raids could not be learned, but at least thirty saloons and blind pigs were searched.

GRAND JURY ON MISSING OIL WIZARD'S TRAIL

To Take Up Finances of H. B. Sewell.

A grand jury investigation into the tangled financial affairs of Henry B. Sewell, vanished gasoline wizard, is to be begun next week at the behest of numerous of Sewell's creditors, it was learned yesterday.

Three warrants have already been sworn out for Sewell's arrest. The first two were taken out at the South Clark street station on Jan. 6 and 7. Sewell did not leave the city until Feb. 3. The third warrant was sworn out Feb. 14.

Indicted in 1913.

Sewell was arrested in Los Angeles on June 12, 1913, it was learned yesterday, after he had been indicted in New York for defrauding James Macy Willetts, a member of a prominent and wealthy family, out of more than $200,000 by book sales.

Sewell at that time represented himself as working his way through Columbia college, and Willetts, a Yale graduate of the class of 1910, took an interest in him. A warm friendship developed.

Sewell, it was charged, not only sold books, autographs, and documents at extravagant prices to Willetts but also obtained an automobile and some articles of jewelry. The specific charge on which Sewell was indicted was the theft of $5,710 from Willetts.

Sewell returned to New York voluntarily after his arrest, even going so far as to pay $150 extra fare for the detectives who had him in custody. He was released on bail of $5,000.

Book Firm Sues.

Willetts met Sewell in November, 1913, through a Mr. Von Weldon, whom Willetts knew as an agent for the book firm of George Barrie & Sons. This firm subsequently sued Willetts for $47,000 on notes given in connection with book purchases. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and under this verdict Willetts recovered $36,313 which he had paid for "de luxe" editions sold him by Sewell. All the outstanding notes were canceled.

There was apparently no prosecution after the indictment was returned, and there is no official record of a disposal of the case.

STATE SCHOOL CHIEFS DISCUSS THRIFT COURSE

State superintendents of schools of the seventh federal reserve district met yesterday at the University club to discuss means of making permanent in the public schools of the five states instruction in economic principles and the projected practice of thrift. Dr. Shaller Mathews, dean of the divinity school of the University of Chicago and educational director of the seventh district government savings organization, presided.

It was decided to work out plans in each of the five states to put into effect the recommendations of a committee named by the National Educational association for the teaching of methods of sound investment of children's savings. At the meeting were W. E. Richards, associate educational director of the savings organization; S. B. Crane, representing Gov. McDougal of the Federal Reserve bank; Albert Bosworth, representing William B. Bosworth, director of sales of the savings organization; C. P. Gary, state superintendent of public instruction of Wisconsin; W. S. Booth, representing State Superintendent Blair of Illinois; S. N. Hines, state superintendent of Indiana, and H. Z. Wilbur, representing the state superintendent of Michigan.

HOW TO WEAR ARMY CLOTHES IN LEGAL WAY

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Men who served in the army during the world war, and who are still wearing part of their service uniforms, as well as the people who have been buying used uniforms from the salvage branch of the army quartermaster department, may avoid violating the law forbidding the wearing of official uniforms by civilians by observing certain precautions which the salvage branch outlined through the war department today.

The easiest way to avoid coming in contact with the law is to remove the military buttons and insignia. To dye the uniform or to change the cut also will give immunity.

"Civilians who may wish to wear army clothing," the war department said, "by reason of its cheapness and convenience, can now do so safely within the law by changing the cut or dyeing the cloth, and always by removing the military buttons and insignia."

Gotham 6 Months Behind Chicago on Dress Styles

Speaking of styles, New York is just six months behind Chicago. Authority for this statement is Mme. Alla Ripley, president of the Fashion Art club, who just returned from style showings in the east.

"Models I saw displayed in New York were shown here six months ago," Mme. Ripley said. The club is working for ten-inches-from the floor skirts. Grays, soft tans, dull blues, lavenders, and ashes will be the favorite colors this season, she said.

MORROW PICKED AS WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY ORATOR

Celebrations in Schools Are Arranged.

A patriotic celebration at the Auditorium theater Tuesday morning under the auspices of the Union League club will be the feature of the observance of Washington's birthday in Chicago. Edwin P. Morrow, Republican governor of Kentucky, nationally known through his fight against lynch law, will be the principal speaker.

In the public schools patriotic services will be conducted by 350,000 school children Monday. Tuesday the schools will be closed.

Veterans to Attend.

At the Auditorium Gov. Morrow's audience will be composed largely of men who have risked their lives to uphold American ideals — doughboys, jackies, and marines from every American Legion post in Chicago and the G. A. R. and Spanish war veterans.

The doors will be thrown open to ticket holders at 10 o'clock, and at 10:30 the general public will be admitted to the reserved seats not occupied by that time.

Program for Day.

The program of the celebration will be as follows:

Music—Great Lakes band.
Community singing—By the audience.
"Star-Spangled Banner"—Myrna Sharlow.
Tableau—"The Spirit of '76."
Music—Great Lakes band.
"Battle Hymn of the Republic"—Myrna Sharlow.
Invocation—The Rev. John Timothy Stone.
Introduction—John Fletcher, president of the Union League club.
Oration—The Hon. Edwin P. Morrow, governor of Kentucky, "Liberty and Patriotism."
"America"—Myrna Sharlow, Great Lakes band.

The Rt. Rev. Charles D. Williams, Episcopal bishop of Michigan, will be the speaker at the club's annual Washington's birthday dinner at the clubhouse in the evening. His topic will be "England and America—Some Recent Impressions."

Irish to Celebrate.

The day will be extensively celebrated throughout Chicago by the members of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic. Sixty-six local councils will hold separate meetings Tuesday evening at which the farewell address of the first president will be read.

The American Brotherhood U. S. A. will give its fifth annual Washington banquet at the Hotel La Salle Wednesday evening, Feb. 23. Robert M. Sweitzer will act as toastmaster. The speakers of the evening will be Ninian H. Welch, William H. Malone, Health Commissioner John D. Robertson, John P. McGoorty, Miles J. Devine, and M. J. Maloney.

Burial of H. A. Chapin, Business Veteran, Today

Henry Augustus Chapin, for more than a half a century a business man in Chicago, will be buried today in Park Ridge cemetery. Mr. Chapin, who was 90 years old, died Feb. 13 in Los Angeles, Cal., where he had made his home for the last few years, and his body was sent to Park Ridge for burial.

Mr. Chapin was born in New York City on July 17, 1831, and in 1842 his parents moved to Munda, N. Y., traveling by boat on the Erie canal. On the boat he met Miss Fannie Fox, and seventeen years later he married her in La Salle, Ill. Following the civil war, Mr. Chapin established a furniture store on State street, and when it was wiped out in the Chicago fire he became connected with the furniture house of John A. Colby, where he remained many years.

Mr. Chapin is survived by his widow, Mrs. Fannie Fox Chapin, and four children, Mrs. Laura C. Marsh, Mrs. Elmer E. Tatcher of Wilmette, Raymond A. Chapin of Portland, O., and Miss Frances F. Chapin of Los Angeles, Cal.

WEGNER—Edward O. Wegner. In loving memory of our dear husband and father, who passed away one year ago today, Feb. 20, 1920.
We always sit and think of you when we are all alone,
For memory is the only thing that grief can call its own.
More and more each day we miss you,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But little do they know the sorrow
That lies within our hearts concealed.
FROM WIFE AND SON.

WEINBERGER—Moses Weinberger — In sad and loving memory of our dear father and grandfather, who passed away two years ago today, Feb. 20, 1919.

Perfect Foot Comfort and Shoe Style

in every pair of Dr. Pinkston's Combination Last Shoes, because they are two widths narrower in the heel, one width narrower in the arch, and two widths wider in the ball than any shoe that has ever been made.

The narrow heel prevents the shoe from slipping up and down, oxfords and pumps from bulging at side. The narrow arch keeps the foot from sliding forward, which gives you corns, callouses, ingrown toe nails, bunions, and broken down arches.

The broad ball gives perfect freedom to the toes.

The secret of my shoe comfort is that the heel stays in the heel; the arch fits up in the arch; the ball gives room for the ball, and the shoe bends where the foot bends—and I have the sizes to fit your feet perfectly without having to give you a shoe that does not fit in order to make a sale. I have a shoe for every foot and for all occasions. Sizes 2 to 12, widths AAAAAAA narrow to EEE wide. Prices $10.00 to $18.00; extra charge for sizes over 9.

Dr. Pinkston's corn and callous remover will stop that awful pain in hard corns on top of toes, soft corns between toes, callouses on bottom of feet, and on bunions. Most all painful corns and callouses have pus cavities in them, and this preparation will remove them both by the roots without pain. Do not be discouraged because other preparations that you have tried just took off the top layer and made your feet so sore you could not walk. My preparation is guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded.

And I let you be the judge. Price $1.00; by mail $1.10—or ask your shoe or drug dealer, and if they have not got it they will get it for you.

Regardless of what your foot needs may be, come to

Do you know of any other good hotel or restaurant where you can get half a tender, sweet lobster for 45 cents? Or a silver platter of fresh shrimps (one dozen) with cocktail sauce for 25 cents?

See How Common Sense Has Lowered Food Prices

What's Better for Breakfast?

Fluffy honey waffles with 3 strips of bacon, maple syrup and butter 25c

The delicious asparagus salad we served at Rector's years ago was one of many features which made that restaurant a famous eating place for discriminating diners. At the North American we now serve that same high quality of asparagus for 35c. At most any other good restaurant or hotel it will cost you 75 cents.

All of our prices are equally low. No matter what you want to eat you will always find just what pleases your taste and you will be served great big generous food portions at prices which would have been reasonable even before the war.

Common Sense has made this possible.

Service was the biggest burden we—and you—had. At times it cost more than the food you ate. Sometimes it was good but often it was not. But you paid for it just the same. Today at the North American you serve yourself. What it used to cost to serve you has been taken from the price. Now, all of your money goes into food and so, for a low price, you get big portions of food which can't be beaten at any price.

You pay nothing for service and there are no waiters standing around to be tipped.

During Lent on Wednesdays and Fridays

Lobster a la Newburg 50c
Broiled Jumbo Whitefish . . . 45c

For 65 cents we serve a whole breast of a tender milk-fed chicken with

Our reduced prices are based on our new wholesale costs

There has been much comment concerning retailers who do not immediately reduce their selling prices to correspond with reductions in wholesale replacement costs.

Our wholesale and retail departments are so interwoven that any reductions in wholesale factory costs are at once reflected in our retail selling prices.

The savings offered you during our present Semi-Annual Sale, we believe, anticipate Spring reductions and are only partially shown on this page. Your inspection of our merchandise and prices will convince you that we have marked a large number of discontinued patterns at prices even lower than are justified by present replacement costs.

Goods purchased now will be held for May 1st delivery

ART STAFF WINS "PRO" SKATING TITLE

OHIO JOLTS MAROON FIVE, 31 TO 30

MAROON ALUMNI POINT WAY TO ATHLETIC GLORY

Urge Spending and Assistants for Stagg.

"I FEEL sure that the attitude of the university authorities is one of unshaken confidence in Mr. Stagg."—Prof. E. J. Goodspeed, secretary to the president, University of Chicago.

BY HARVEY T. WOODRUFF.

Athletic expansion at the University of Chicago, or athletic oblivion in competitive contests with other members of the Big Ten or conference colleges, is the alternative on the Midway, according to the conclusions reached by a self-appointed committee of older alumni which has been investigating conditions since the recent criticism of Coach Stagg in connection with basketball.

A. A. STAGG. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

This informal committee, composed of men who have been in touch with Midway athletics for years, will urge upon the board of physical culture and athletics, composed of faculty members, that Prof. Stagg be given more and better assistants for the preparation of Maroon teams.

What Committee Finds.

Here, in part, is what the committee found:

That the University of Chicago spends less for coaches in the four major sports — football, baseball, basketball and track—than any other large college.

That Chicago spends on four major sports' coaching approximately 40 per cent of one of its leading rivals noted for its success in athletics.

That there is a surplus of $50,000 available for athletic purposes.

That Prof. Stagg is entirely satisfied with his own remuneration of $7,000 per year, which is based on his standing as a full professor.

That Prof. Stagg, instead of resenting the hiring of competent men as assistants, as charged, would welcome such a policy.

That Chicago has the reputation among college coaches of paying poorly the assistants of Prof. Stagg, and for that reason such men are difficult to secure.

That Prof. Stagg, if he is to be blamed at all, should be blamed only for undertaking too much work from a mistaken sense of economy to keep within a budget which would not arouse the hostility of the so-called anti-athletic faction within the faculty.

Alumni Want Action.

These alumni are very set in their opinion of the athletics needs of Chicago. If necessary, they will launch a concerted movement in favor of the reforms which they seek to accomplish, presenting the facts to President Judson, the board of physical culture, the board of trustees, or anyone who will listen.

Conditions in collegiate athletics in the west have changed, urge the alumni within the last few years. The time has passed when one man with a little backyard assistance can coach all major sports as Stagg did for years.

They admit that "athletics are secondary to study," as asserted by the professors with arched brows when opposing the large payments to coaches for lugging muscle, but they also assert that the morale and loyalty of an undergraduate student body is built up and strengthened by the success of its athletic teams.

Assistant Coaches Needed.

Chicago, under the best conditions, is much less material available than many of its Big Ten rivals. It is necessary, therefore, to have the most competent coaching staffs to develop what material it has.

The football coaching staff last fall was woefully weak numerically. Princeton, whom the Maroons meet this fall, and several Big Ten schools, has an army of coaches, paid and volunteer, as compared with the Maroons.

These conditions, in the opinion of the alumni, will work more and more to the detriment of Maroon athletic prestige unless rectified, and rectified soon.

Page's Case Example.

These alumni also unearthed the case of Pat Page, former basketball and baseball coach. Page received a salary of $4,000 per year. He went to a coach in Indianapolis, a college much smaller than Chicago, on a three year contract of $6,500, $7,000, and $7,000 per year.

At the time of Page's departure, it is generally reported that he blamed Coach Stagg for his failure to secure the title of associate professor to which he thought his years of service entitled him. This, the alumni found to be untrue, and that Stagg had several times endeavored without success to secure such a title for Page.

In the Wake of the News

BOB MARTIN, A. E. F.

BOB MARTIN, A. E. F. boxing champion, disappointed many admirers in the fifteen round decision bout which he lost to Bill Brennan in New York Friday night. Perhaps too much was expected of him.

One would count Martin out of all future championship possibilities with a tinge of regret—so we will not do it—because many fistic followers would like to see a champion fighter who was a real fighter as well as a real champion rather than a shipyards titleholder.

Even allowing for Brennan's wider ring experience, Martin's wide-open defense, according to reports from the arena, was disappointing. But Bob was game and he was willing, and he was not stopped by Brennan, who is known as a hard puncher rather than a scienced performer.

This lack of knowing how to handle himself, in a measure, may be urged in favor of Martin's future efforts, for otherwise a boxer who has been in the ring even as long as he, is expected to know more of the fine points. Possibly, Martin, with more experience and coaching from a tried veteran, may develop his artillery attack and at the same time find a more effective defense.

Bob Martin was beaten. He was eliminated from championship consideration for the present, but we will not count him entirely out of it yet. This reflects our hopes rather than our conviction—without having seen the battle.

How to Tell 'Em.

Since the fashions for the mothers
And the maids of sweet sixteen
Have become the same from turbans to pajamas,
I have oft been sorely puzzled,
As I walked behind a crowd,
How to separate the daughters from the mammas.

But this winter's solved the question,
And no longer do I doubt,
Tho her skirts are short, her raiment bright and dapper;
For the older generation
Seems to dodge one innovation—
That's the flapping flopping footwear of the flapper!

MARKET LETTER.

FOLLOWING the custom of all market commentators, "I talked with a leading banker last week," who said: "We have turned the the turner and improvement will be gradual. Business! This country always has had business and always will have business. Except for a few commodities in which there are frozen credits, shelves are almost bare and will have to be filled."

Incidentally, we learned what "frozen credits" were. We always had supposed it was the freeze your banker gave you when you wanted to borrow money.

We had another hot tip last week—Briscoe Motors. We had it after it had risen from 13 to 18¾. That's when we usually get them, after they have had their advance and are ready to drop. But we didn't bite.

We anticipate a mild rise before inauguration, but, remembering ante-election experience, we are more interested in the course of the market after March 4 than before. Business expects a constructive administration under Harding, but after eight years of Wilson it wants to be shown.

M'GOWAN 2D TO 'DARK HORSE' OF NATIONAL MEET

Bill Steinmetz Captures Amateur Championship.

Lake Placid, N. Y., Feb. 19.—Arthur Staff of Chicago, victor in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE'S first Silver Skates derby in 1917, won a clear title to the American professional skating title today when he captured the honors of the meet with a total of 135 points. The Chicago skater proved the dark horse of the meet. Everett McGowan of St. Paul, the favorite, was second, with 120 points; Ed Lamy of Saranac Lake, N. Y., third, with 65, and Ben O'Sickey of Philadelphia fourth, with 40. Peter Dube of Escanaba, Mich., the fifth entrant, failed to score.

First National "Pro" Meet.

The meet, sanctioned by the Adirondack Skating association, was the first national professional speed skating meet. Bobby McLean, the former champion, was invited to compete, but failed to appear to defend his title.

Today's events included the 220 yard dash, in which Staff was first, McGowan second, and Lamy third; the half mile, won by Staff, with O'Sickey second and McGowan third; and the three mile, in which McGowan was the winner, Staff finishing second, and O'Sickey third.

Protest Not Allowed.

In the 220 yard dash O'Sickey protested McGowan's second place, claiming the latter had fouled him, but the protest was not allowed. In the three mile, Lamy led the field up to two laps of the finish, when Staff took the lead, but was nosed out by McGowan in a close finish.

Staff, as the winner of the meet, received $595, which included the grand prize of $250. McGowan received $330; Lamy, $170, including a lap prize of $25 in the three mile, and O'Sickey $80.

Bill Steinmetz Amateur Champ.

The winner of the Adirondack amateur championship meet, which was skated simultaneously with the professional meet, was William Steinmetz of Chicago, with 90 points. Al Leitch, Lake Placid, finished second with 80, and Richard Donovan of St. Paul third, with 50.

At the close of this meet Bobby Hearn of New York, speaking for the amateur skaters competing in the recent international meet, publicly thanked the officials of the Lake Placid Skating association for the treatment accorded the skaters. Summaries:

Half mile—Won by Staff, Chicago; O'Sickey, Philadelphia, second; McGowan, St. Paul, third. Time, 1:38 2-5.

220 yards—Won by Staff, Chicago; McGowan, St. Paul, second; Lamy, Saranac Lake, third. Time, :19 3-5.

Three mile—Won by McGowan, St. Paul; Staff, Chicago, second; O'Sickey, Philadelphia, third. Time, 9:10 1-5.

HOME RUN BAKER MAY JOIN YANKS; SOON TO DECIDE

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 19.—It is likely that Home Run Baker will be batting third for the New York Yankees, with the mighty Ruth following, when the umpire calls the first "play ball" of the 1921 season.

Joe Kelley, Yankee scout, and Baker met yesterday by appointment and thrashed over the entire matter.

Regarding the chances of the Yankees to come through this year, Baker is optimistic. "It looks like a real club," he said, "and I believe they have a first class chance to be champions. I want to play this year and will give my decision in ten days."

SNYDER HIGH IN WING SHOT EVENT

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 19.—The 100 target international wing shot championship, concluding event of the annual interstate trap shoot, was not completed today and went over until tomorrow, after each of the twenty-eight contestants had shot at fifty-five targets. Harry Snyder of Kansas City was high with 53; A. C. Connors of Springfield, Ill., had 52, and H. C. Hoffman of Philadelphia, Fred Etchen of Coffeyville, Kas., E. C. Wheeler of Pawhuska, Okla., Frank Hughes of Mobridge, S. D., and Frank Troeh of Vancouver, Wash., tied with 50.

Detroit Battery Players at San Antone This Week

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 19.—Thirty-one players will report at the San Antonio camp of the Detroit Americans March 1, Frank Navin, president of the club, announced tonight. Pitchers and catchers will begin arriving there next week. At the beginning of the training season the squad will include fourteen slabmen, seven infielders, six outfielders, and four backstop artists.

Mary Conley Winner at North Side Natatorium

Mary Conley won the 50 yard breast stroke for girls in :45 in one of the races that featured the first meet of the Chicago Aquatic club at North Side natatorium last night. Adelaide Peterson won the 50 yard free style for girls under 16 years old in :39.

THE DAYS OF REAL SPORT

JOIE RAY WINS 3,000 METERS; GUILLEMOT 4TH

New York, Feb. 19.—Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C., Chicago, America's best middle distance runner, won the international 3,000 meter special race at the Guaranty club's indoor games in Madison Square Garden tonight. This was the special event in which the Olympic 5,000 meter winner, Corporal Joseph Guillemot, came from France to compete.

JOSEF GUILLEMOT. [Photo: Und. & Und.]

For half the distance Guillemot was in second place, about twenty yards behind Ray, who led practically from start to finish. Walter Higgins of Columbia university passed the French soldier at the beginning of the tenth lap, little more than half the distance. John J. Romig of Penn State college forged ahead of the Frenchman at the beginning of the fourteenth lap, and from then to the finish the order was Ray, Higgins, Romig, and Guillemot.

Ray Wins by 35 Yards.

Ray won handily by thirty-five yards. Higgins, in second place, was a half lap ahead of Romig and fully three-quarters in front of Guillemot. The Frenchman's showing was a disappointment to the spectators, but he was handicapped somewhat by an injury to his right foot suffered in training. It was his first appearance on a board floor.

The 1,000 yards run resulted in a rousing finish between the winner, Tom Campbell of Yale, and Harold Cutbill of the Boston A. A. Cutbill led all the way into the home stretch, when Campbell challenged him, and five yards from the finish drew level with Cutbill, finally beating out the Boston flyer by inches.

Murchison Is Sprint Winner.

Loren Murchison, Illinois A. C., won the medley sprints, finishing first in two of the dashes. Murchison won at 60 and 70 yards and ran a dead heat with Ed Farrell of Brooklyn college in the 50 yard dash. The winning time for the respective events was :06 3-5, :07 1-5 (equaling world's record), and :05 3-5. Summaries:

International 3,000 meter special invitation race—Won by Joie Ray, Illinois A. C., Chicago; Walter Higgins, Columbia, second; John J. Romig, Penn State, third; Josef Guillemot, France, fourth. Time, 8:41 1-5.

Intercollegiate medley relay; 880, 220, 440 yards and 1 mile—Won by Yale [Sweetz, T. Cox, T. Campbell, and H. Hillas]; Harvard [Gourdin, Chute, Wharton, and O'Connell], second; Columbia [Graeb Burtt, Marzolf, and Lowenkopf], third. Time, 7:51 4-5.

The Guaranty 1,000 yard run—Won by Tom Campbell, Yale; Harold Cutbill, Boston A. A., second; Sid Leslie, unattached, New York, third; Jack Sellers, New York A. C., fourth. Time, 2:16.

Intercity 1 mile relay—Won by Philadelphia team [Jack, Trout, Irwin, and Rogers]; Boston, second; New York, third. Time, 3:32 4-5.

Medley sprint special, three events, 60, 70, and 50 yards—Won by Loren Murchison, Illinois A. C., 4½ points; Ed Farrell, Brooklyn college, second, 3½ points; Bernie Wefers Jr., New York A. C., third, 8 points; Victor Graeb, Columbia university, fourth, 12 points.

NEBRASKA, 39; NOTRE DAME, 21.

Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 19.—For the second time the University of Nebraska basketball team was victorious tonight over Notre Dame, 39 to 21.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

Today's Question.

If you had a voice in legalizing boxing in Illinois, which would you prefer, decision or no decision bouts, and how many rounds?

Where Asked.

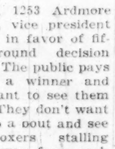
Wabash avenue and Jackson and Michigan boulevards.

The Answers.

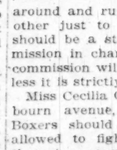
Ed St. Clair, 1101 Kimball building, assistant game warden—I am in favor of having ten round bouts to a decision under the strict supervision of a state commission. The commission should regulate the admission fee. I do not believe in this thing of charging $10 and $25 for a ringside seat to see second rate fights.

Miss Dorothy Garbeau, 6213 Langley avenue, stenographer—They ought to allow fights to a decision up to ten or fifteen rounds. In my opinion boxing is the most manly sport in which men can engage. I never see two kids scrapping on the streets that I don't stop to watch them. Of course a commission should see that contestants are evenly matched and both are in good physical condition for a bout.

Herbert J. Daniels, 1253 Ardmore avenue, vice president—I am in favor of fifteen round decision bouts. The public pays to see a winner and they want to see them fight. They don't want to go to a bout and see the boxers stalling around and running away from each other just to take up time. There should be a strict, honest state commission in charge of all fights, but a commission will be a useless thing unless it is strictly on the square.



Miss Cecilia Gardner, 416 South Kilbourn avenue, clerk—Boxers should not be allowed to fight more than ten rounds, but there should be a decision so the spectaters will know who is the winner. What is the use of seeing a fight unless somebody wins? Boxing is a good manly sport when conducted along fair and square lines, but it was crookedness that killed it before, just like horse racing.



Charles Lavine, 1826 Humboldt boulevard, manager—We should have fifteen round boxing contests to a decision. Then we would be in competition with New York. Illinois and Chicago are entitled to the best attractions going. All matches should be under strict state supervision and the state officials should be men of high type and strictly on the square. They should do the same thing for boxing Judge Landis is doing for baseball.

Danny Kramer Finishes Leonard in One Round.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Danny Kramer of Boston scored one of the quickest knockouts in the history of the Philadelphia ring tonight when he put the silence on Eattling Leonard in just two minutes and twenty seconds in the windup at the National A. A.

HERE'S A RECORD; CLEVELAND CLUB HASN'T HOLDOUT

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Besides winning an American league pennant and a world's championship under heavy handicaps last year the Cleveland team established a new world's record this winter by signing up for the 1921 campaign without a man joining the "holdout" colony.

JAMES C. DUNN.

So far as known this never happened before since world series were inaugurated. It is the usual thing for at least one or two of the players on a team that has achieved the highest diamond honors to estimate their own share in the achievement as a greater monetary value than their club owner did, with resulting bickerings over salaries.

Thirty-five Under Contract.

President J. C. Dunn of the Indians announced yesterday his entire team of thirty-five men was under contract for this year, and that he had had no trouble in signing them. Not one of his players had made an unreasonable request, he declared. This is so uncommon it commands attention.

This may be due to the generosity of the Cleveland club owner, or to the high class of his players, but more likely it is a result of the recognition by the world's champion Indians that President Dunn and Tris Speaker are thoroughbred sportsmen from heels to hair, and strict adherents to the square deal. The baseball rooters' knowledge of that fact was what made the Indians the most popular favorites during their pennant fight, and again in the fall derby, not only in Cleveland but everywhere else except on Long Island.

Players Get Square Deal.

Possibly aother reason why his players gave the Indian chief a square deal on their new contracts was the fact he voluntarily paid them their full salaries, pro rata, from the close of the American league season last fall to the end of the world's series. That was compulsory in the original rules governing the big event from 1903 until 1918, when the salary rule was suspended on account of the world war, which created an emergency.

The Cleveland pitchers and catchers, more than half the team, have been ordered to report to Manager Speaker at Dallas, Tex., on Feb. 28, and the balance of the team a week later.

Illinois Track Outfit Beats Notre Dame, 66-29

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Illinois defeated Notre Dame in their dual track meet today, 66 to 29, taking seven of the eleven firsts. Hayes of Notre Dame won the forty yard dash in :04 3-5, but Desch and Murphy, the other internationally known local stars, failed to win their favorite events.

Desch placed third in the 40 yard high hurdles and second in the quarter mile. Murphy was tied for second in the high jump. Yates and Alberts of Illinois each scored 8 points.

WHO SAYS THEY NEVER COME BACK? SULLIVAN KNOCKS OUT 1908 FOE

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 19.—Jack ("Twin") Sullivan of Cambridge, 42 years old, tonight defeated Joe Thomas of Diamond Hill, R. I., 35, on a technical knockout in the third round, in a return boxing bout, sequel to a ten round draw fought in Los Angeles thirteen years ago. The match was scheduled for ten rounds.

The "old timers" were rated as light heavyweights tonight. In Los Angeles they were middleweights.

Sullivan opened a cut over his opponent's eye in the first round and followed up this lead with successive jabs to the wound. He showered short right and left jabs to the body that bothered Thomas considerably, and the end came when he was practically at Sullivan's mercy.

GEORGES TELLS HOW HE'LL WIN: "I'LL FOOL JACK"

[Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.]
[Copyright: 1921.]

COPENHAGEN, Feb. 18.—Georges Carpentier, who passed through this city today on his way to Christiania, was interviewed concerning his match with Jack Dempsey. He said that the match would take place in New York July 2, and would be a fifteen round affair. He said that there was no truth in the rumor that he would retire if he won, but that any boxers that wanted to fight him would then have to come to France.

Carpentier will return to Copenhagen next Friday and give an exhibition, showing how he won the Levinsky fight. From here he will go to London and other English cities and then to Marseilles on his way to North Africa.

Asked how he would manage Dempsey, he answered: "I'll fool him."

COULON'S MAGIC FAILS TO SAVE HIS $8,000 WAD

PARIS, Feb. 19.—His "magic" touch did not avail Johnny Coulon, former bantamweight champion and strength neutralizer, last night when he was traveling from Geneva to Paris.

Johnny became engaged in conversation with a charming young lady and told her of his exploits in resisting the efforts of the strongest men of France to lift him. The girl volunteered to attempt to lift the former pugilist, and Johnny consented to the trial.

She failed. Subsequently the American discovered his pocketbook, which had contained $8,000, was missing.

BY ALBON HOLDEN.

In one of the most frenzied finishes that ever wound up a Big Ten basketball game Ohio State nosed out the University of Chicago, 31 to 30, in Bartlett gymnasium last night. It required five minutes of overtime play to get a decision in the hectic combat, and an uncanny eye for the ring on long shots did the trick for the Buckeyes in the extra minutes. It was Ohio's first win in six weeks.

CAPT. SLYKER. [Ohio State.]

At the end of the first half the score was 14 to 13 in favor of Chicago, a basket by Halladay putting the Maroons in front for the first time just before the gun. Ohio had jumped into a three basket lead at the start when the Maroons did not cover Blair close enough. Fine free throwing by Vollmer, who dropped eight straight into the net, pulled the Maroons up.

Close During Second Half.

The teams were never more than a basket apart in the second half, but the pace remained slow, neither having enough of a passing game to break into a scoring spurt. Many of the passes went wild, Chicago being particularly ineffective in long passes to men under the basket.

With three minutes to play the score was tied. Chicago led by one basket with one minute left. Capt. Slyker tied it up at 25 apiece with an astounding shot from the middle of the floor.

Blair got a long basket to open the overtime period, but McGuire came right back with one for Chicago. Immediately Pence put Ohio ahead again with the third Buckeye shot from the middle of the floor. Again the score was tied on Vollmer's basket, but Ohio continued its mad tossing, Dudley scoring from thirty feet.

Ohio Protects One Point Lead.

A free throw brought Chicago's deficit to a single point with one minute to play, and by careful passing and holding the ball Ohio kept out of danger.

Coach Stagg kept Bob Birkhoff, who leads the Big Ten in scoring, out of the game in the first half, using Stahr, a sophomore, but after the intermission sent the spark plug of the Maroon attack onto the floor. Ohio had lost eight games in a row, and a small crowd turned out, expecting an easy win for the Maroons. Lineup:

Indiana, 23; Purple, 21

De Hority's basket in the last two minutes of play enabled Indiana to defeat Northwestern's basketball team at Patten gym last night. Throughout the first half Northwestern failed to show anything resembling teamwork, while Indiana kept piling up points and turning the half with a 13 to 3 advantage.

Indiana opened the second half with two more baskets, but when Palmer was inserted in the Purple lineup in place of Saunders, Northwestern started on a desperate scoring rally and tied the count at 21 all with two minutes to play.

On the next jumpoff De Hority grabbed the ball, and, dribbling down the floor, shot the winning basket for Indiana. De Hority was easily the star, sinking five baskets. McKenzie led the Purple's scoring with three baskets and six free throws. Four thousand, including 300 Indiana fans, witnessed the struggle. Lineup:

Illinois, 17; Badgers, 9

Urbana, Ill., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Illinois maintained its tie for first place in the conference tonight when Coach Winters' squad defeated Wisconsin, 17 to 9, in a game featured by close and masterful guarding of both fives.

Illini and Badgers camped on each other's trail so closely in the first half that each scored only a basket apiece. Illinois leading, 5 to 3, gaining the advantage by Capt. Vail's free throws.

In the second half the Illini penetrated the Badger defense, took the lead, and were never headed. Lineup:

Iowa, 20; Purdue, 15

Iowa City, Ia., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Because of a great brace in the second half, Iowa downed Purdue tonight, 20 to 15. Purdue took an early lead and baskets by Coffing and White gave Indiana an 8 to 2 lead at the half. Shimek scored two points on fouls, Iowa's only counters.

Coming back in the second half the Hawkeyes scored 18 points to Purdue's 12, and forged ahead. Shimek shot five baskets from the middle of the floor.

Capt. Kaufman's defensive play was stellar. Miller's defensive play broke up Iowa's attack frequently. Lineup:

MIDDIES' TEAMS IN SIX EVENTS; WIN EVERY ONE

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 19.—The Annapolis midshipmen again cleaned up today in a six cornered program of athletic events, every contest being won by a decisive margin.

The middies took the measure of the swimmers of Massachusetts Tech, 37 to 16, and overwhelmed the boxers of the same institution, 27 to 0. Dartmouth wrestlers succumbed, 26 to 5, and Yale fencers were defeatd, 11 to 5.

In gymnastics Uncle Sam's naval wards showed their supremacy over Haverford, 38 to 16, while the navy basketball team scored a comparatively easy triumph over Marietta college of Ohio, 45 to 16.

BRICKIES PLAY PULLMAN TODAY

Having been ordered to replay their match with the Scullins of St. Louis in the national soccer championship series, the Bricklayers of Chicago have resumed training. The United States Football association has set the replay for Feb. 27 at the Bricklayers' field. J. B. Stark of Detroit has been picked to referee. Today the Bricklayers will tune up by playing the Pullman team at 3 o'clock. The proceeds will go to aid Jack Parry, a former member of both clubs who now is in Los Angeles.

Lane Tech Swimmers Beat New Trier in Meet, 35 to 24

Lane Tech swimmers defeated New Trier, 35 to 24, in a dual senior meet in the latter's tank last night. Miller, Lane's captain, was the star, scoring fifteen points with first places in the 40 and 100 yard swims and 60 yard back stroke events. Summaries:

Oak Park Athletes Sweep Honors in Meets at Midway

Oak Park High school yesterday won both senior and junior Cook county indoor track championships in the final of the three meet series held by the University of Chicago in Bartlett gymnasium. Coach Thistlethwaite's seniors piled up 103 5-6 points in the series of Saturday meets, winning easily over University High, second with 88½. City schools scored only eight points to 271 for the Suburban league teams.

The Oak Park junior total was 61, with University High again being second with 41½.

The star of the final day's performances at the Midway was McIlwain of Deerfield, who was awarded the cup for high point totals in the series. The Highland Park leader won both high and low hurdles and took second in the 220 and shot put. Steger of Oak Park, who won the fifty yard dash and the shot put, finished second in individual points. Oak Park landed four of the five silver cups by winning both championships and both relays.

SOX FACE STIFF JOB IN BOOKING TRAINING GAMES

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Rival big league baseball clubs almost crowded the Chicago White Sox out of Texas this spring, regardless of the size of the state. For a number of years the Sox have been able to pick the games they wanted to play down there on their spring training jaunt, but this year seven of the majors decided upon Texas for training quarters, and there's a team in almost every prosperous city, the result being that few games are to be had by the cleansed White Hose.

Boss Comiskey of the south siders always has opposed playing other big league teams in the spring or he might have had lots of games. He could have battled the Giants, the Cincinnati Reds, the Brooklyn team, or the Braves, but he stood firm on his old time belief that it is wrong for one big league team to play another before the season opens. His rivals grabbed games with the Texas leaguers down there, so he has few combats on the books and slim chances to get more.

Only Six Texas Games.

Secretary Grabiner of the club, who has been working on the spring slate all winter, yesterday announced a list of six combats against Texas league outfits. It looks as if Gleason and his men will drill on the Waxahachie field from Monday morning until Friday night each week and then get some Saturday and Sunday games, but that is all, except some shows to be staged on the return trip north.

The secretary announced the Sox would perform against the Wichita Falls team March 25, 26, and 27; against the Fort Worth club on April 2 and 3, and against Shreveport's team April 4. From there they are expecting to go into Little Rock for a contest, then to Memphis for one, on into Louisville for a game, then to Milwaukee for a Saturday and Sunday preceding the opening of the season, and perhaps get a game in Toledo before starting the race against the Tigers at Detroit.

First Squad off March 4.

In other years it was an easy matter to book games in Dallas, San Antonio, and Houston, as well as Fort Worth, and one didn't need to think of going so far out of the way as Wichita Falls. However, Grabiner has a lot more small town contests booked for the second squad of the Sox, so that the host of young players will have plenty of opportunities to show their worth before returning north.

It is the order now for the first squad of Sox, consisting mostly of young pitchers and catchers, to leave Chicago March 4, proceeding to the Waxahachie camp under the direction of Manager Gleason. A week later the balance of the squad will leave, and all should be in pretty fair condition for the games against Wichita Falls, which begin March 25.

It was learned yesterday that Douglas McWeeney, the tall and speedy hurler procured from Milwaukee, has turned down his contract. Just how much more he wants wasn't stated.

Johnny Evers, manager of the Cubs, who is here preparing to leave for the Coast with a squad of pitchers and catchers next Thursday noon, is kept busy attending banquets and smokers.

Charles Heddon Sidetracks Music for Try at Billiards and Wins Title.

CHARLES HEDDON of Dowagiac, Mich., who won the national amateur balk line championship at Cleveland last week, is well known in Chicago, having competed in tournaments at Mussey's rooms. Few players possess enough enthusiasm to travel a hundred miles to compete in a house tournament, but Heddon is one of the few.

CHARLES HEDDON.

As a billiard fan he rates 100 per cent. At the age of 24 Mr. Heddon possessed a strong desire to excel in some accomplishment outside of business. He reduced his choice to music and billiards. He flipped a coin to determine the matter, and music was the loser.

Since that time Heddon has been a keen student of balk line, but up to last week his greatest success had been the winning of the Michigan championship. He made his first try for the national amateur championship in 1914, and although he finished in a tie for sixth place, he made a record run of 125, which stood until last week, when he topped it by four points.

The following year at Philadelphia he tied with E. W. Gardner for third place and in 1916 at New York tied with the Appleby brothers for third place. At Detroit in 1918 he tied for second place with D. McAndless and Eugene Milburn. Sickness kept him out of the 1919 and 1920 events.

Following his intention to take up billiards, Heddon made trips to Chicago to take lessons from the late Lasker Perkins.

Mr. Heddon is head of the firm of James Heddon & Sons, manufacturers of fishing tackle, and is a director of the Dowagiac National bank, which he organized nine years ago. Before he was 21 he started the Dowagiac Daily News which developed into a successful paper.

MAROON GRADS DEFEAT PURPLE IN MATCH SWIM

Alumni water athletes of University of Chicago gave their old time rivals, the grads of Northwestern, a double defeat in the pool of the Hamilton club last night before a good-sized flock of alumni, club members and swimming fans. Two events were held, a 160-yard four-man relay, and a water basketball contest.

Chicago's relay team, composed of Edward O'Connor, Dunlap Clark, Ray White, and "Red" Crawford, held the lead during the last laps and won by a fair margin. Northwestern's team was composed of Milton Branower, L. George, George Marquardt, and Harry Grove.

Chicago won in water basketball, 3 to 2, Clark, at forward, scoring all three goals for the Maroons. Marquardt shot both goals for his team.

The FRANKLIN

THE Franklin is a good car to own—not merely some of the time, but all of the time. It gives a performance above the average at a cost considerably below the average—and does it the year round.

It is comfortable—even on the worst roads you meet in a day's run.

It is free from cooling troubles—even in the dead of winter, on the hottest desert, or up the longest grades.

It is economical—even in the hands of inexperienced drivers. Arrange for a thorough demonstration and see how these owners' results are possible:

RING LOSER WHEN CROUTCH YEARNS FOR TITLE, M. D.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Introducing Dr. Benjamin F. Croutch. Dr. Croutch is assistant surgeon [reserve] of the United States health service, located in Chicago.

DR. B. F. CROUTCH. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

One might say that Dr. Croutch at the age of 29 years has made considerable progress in the profession he has chosen, but this story is not meant to discuss the man who has an M. D. following his moniker. We're going to tell something about Ben Croutch, who knows how to deal a stinging punch with the padded mitts, a fellow who might have achieved the heights in pugilism had he not decided to adopt the medical profession instead.

Born in Michigan Village.

Perhaps it would be better to tell chronologically what has happened in the twenty-nine years of Ben Croutch's worldly existence. Back in the year 1892 Ben was born in the little Indian village of Ontonagon, in Michigan—on Sept. 10, to be exact. The first fourteen years of his life were passed in the small Michigan village, where he acquired a grammar school education. Then the Croutch family found it necessary to consider further education for Ben, with the result the family moved to Chicago.

Crane High school was chosen for Ben to attend, and that selection gave to Crane one of the greatest athletes that ever represented that school. Ben played football for four years and the last year had the honor of being captain of his eleven, which won for Crane the first high school championship it had won in thirteen years. That was in 1911.

Track Man and Swimmer.

Ben Croutch's athletic endeavor was not confined to football. He was a member of almost every athletic team at Crane. He was a point winner in track and field competition, his specialties being the dashes and weights. He also was on the swimming team.

But even at that time young Croutch was not satisfied with his athletic achievements. There was something missing. He was not a boxer. While attending High school he slipped into a loop boxing gymnasium to get a peek at the boys with the padded mitts.

Spotted by Nate Lewis.

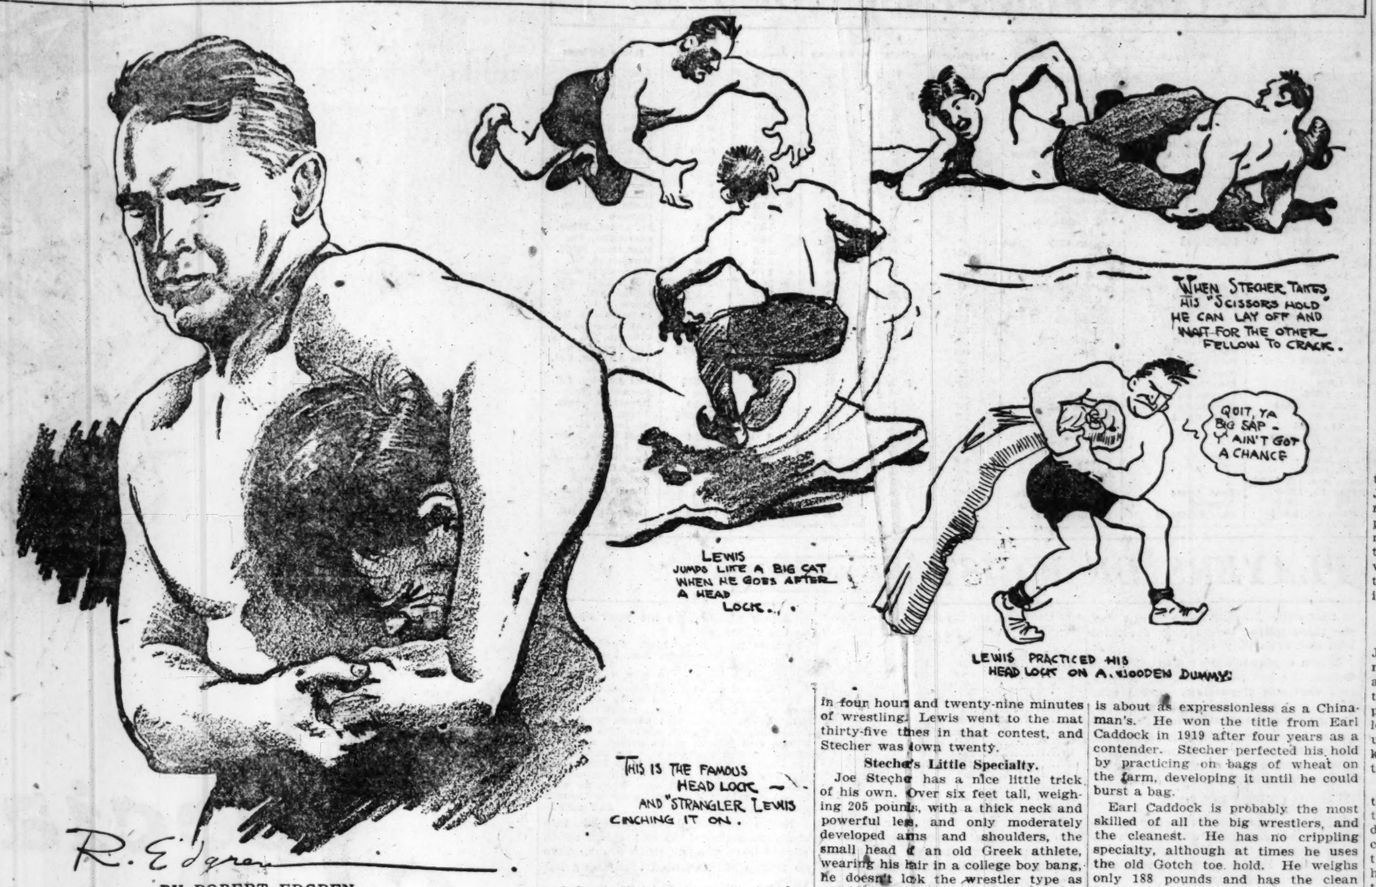
One day Nate Lewis saw Croutch in action. Lewis liked the way the youngster handled himself and decided, if Croutch was willing, that the young fellow should travel the pugilistic trail. Croutch was turned over to Harry Forbes, who gave him a course of boxing lessons.

Under the tutorship of Forbes Croutch developed rapidly. He became so adept that Lewis decided to give him the real baptism; so one afternoon they sent him against Greek K. O. Brown in a six round tilt in the gymnasium. At the end of the six rounds Ben was still on his feet and willing to mix with the Greek.

Ambtion for an "M. D."

But in all these years in which young Croutch was starring in the different branches of athletic endeavor he had something on his mind. He had an ambition that in no way concerned athletics. He was looking to the future, and in that future he pictured his calling card with an "M. D." following the signature. He wanted to be a doctor more than anything else. That's why it is Dr. Benjamin F. Croutch today.

"STRANGLER" LEWIS SHOULD HAVE BEEN A TURK



BY ROBERT EDGREN.

AMERICAN wrestling is becoming a mild imitation of the Turkish art. Down in Turkey it has been a pleasant custom of the various sultans to entertain themselves by having wrestlers wrestle "to the death."

Nobody can interfere with a sultan's amusements. In a private courtyard the sultan and a few chosen favorites sit comfortably and watch selected champions "go to it." There are no restrictive rules. Gouging, biting, butting, toe holds, kicking, head locks and a Turkish variety of jiu jitsu were indulged in until one of the rivals was rendered helpless, when the final delicious touch was added. The victor strangled the vanquished.

We don't let wrestlers go quite as far as that in America. But since Frank Gotch perfected the toe hold and went around crippling his opponents by twisting and breaking or dislocating their ankles every grappler has tried to invent some new torturing device. The original purpose of wrestling—to put an opponent's shoulders to the mat—has become a mere incident. Modern wrestlers try to torture an opponent until he gives up and rolls over to save himself from serious injury.

Should Bar Torture Holds.

There ought to be a wrestling commission to make rules that will govern mat contests. Toe holds, head locks and similar devices intended to cripple or torture or injure should be classed with the foul blows forbidden in boxing.

The present American champion, "Strangler" Ed Lewis, is master of the head lock—a trick he perfected by years of practice and that has beaten several men whom he might not have been able to put down in straight wrestling.

The head lock consists of gripping a man's head in the crook of one arm, the forearm "locking" across the jaw or side of the head and the pressure increased by pulling with the other hand, using the mechanical principle of the nut-cracker.

Lewis is 6 feet tall, weighs 228 pounds, and is powerfully built. He has developed a tremendous squeeze with his headlock by practicing several years on a wooden dummy—just as the Japanese jiu jitsu men toughen their hands for jiu jitsu by continually pounding with the edge of the hand on heavy planks.

The deadly effect of the headlock has been shown in several recent bouts, when Zbyszko, Stecher, and one or two others beaten by Lewis have gone from the mat to the hospital.

Lewis took the championship from Stech[illegible]t the Seventy-first Regiment armory, New York, last Dec. 13, in 1 hour 41 minutes and 56 seconds. He clamped seven headlocks on Stecher, and finally finished him. Stecher has been out of wrestling since that night, and may never come back as a championship possibility.

Vertebrae Displaced.

The deadly headlock is said to have displaced vertebrae in his neck, causing pressure on the spinal nerve and paralysis of one arm and shoulder. Even if this disappears, Stecher won't be in shape to resist any more headlocks. In a recent bout with Earl Caddock, Lewis ended a long struggle by clamping the headlock on again, rendering Caddock unconscious.

Off the mat Lewis is a pleasant sort of a fellow, but at work he's a regular cave man. With tremendous strength, endu[illegible]ace, and determination, he deliberately wears his opponents down by occasionally clamping on a headlock until they are ready for the final grip. Often he feigns distress, only to catch his man off guard and leap through the air to get him with a headlock. He jumps like a huge cat.

Borrows Moniker.

His real name is Robert Freidrich and he was born at Frankfort, Ky., thirty years ago. The name "Strangler Lewis" was borrowed from a famous wrestler of twenty-five years ago—the original Strangler Lewis, whose specialty was the stranglo hold that has been barred since his time.

Lewis has been ranked in the three best wrestlers in America for five years. April 13, 1919, he lost to Stecher in four hours and twenty-nine minutes of wrestling. Lewis went to the mat thirty-five times in that contest, and Stecher was down twenty.

Stecher's Little Specialty.

Joe Stecher has a nice little trick of his own. Over six feet tall, weighing 205 pounds, with a thick neck and powerful legs, and only moderately developed arms and shoulders, the small head of an old Greek athlete, wearing his hair in a college boy bang, he doesn't look the wrestler type as much as Lewis. Born on a farm at Dodge, Nebraska, Joe and his elder brother, Tony, began wrestling when they were youngster.

At an amateur tournament Farmer Burns, the famous old wrestling champion, who developed Frank Gotch, saw Joe and advised him to make better use of his legs, which appeared to be his strong point. Stecher began studying leg holds and developed his famous "scissors hold."

Hold Bangs Collapse.

In this he simply gets his legs around an opponent's body, hooks his toes together and straightens his legs out, applying a crushing pressure that drives the intestines up against the heart, causing weakness and sometimes collapse.

The effect of this hold, however, is only temporary and Stecher's opponents are usually able to walk back to the dressing room shortly after the end of the bout.

George Bothne, formerly lightweight champion for many years and the cleverest wrester of his class, says that Stecher's scissors is the greatest "finishing hold" ever invented. It's some spectacle to see when Stecher begins jumping at his man feet first and trying to grab him in the scissors. He is remarkably quick with it, and once obtained the hold is seldom broken.

Stecher is Fast Man.

Stecher is very fast for a big man, very cautious, and in action his face is about as expressionless as a Chinaman's. He won the title from Earl Caddock in 1919 after four years as a contender. Stecher perfected his hold by practicing on bags of wheat on the farm, developing it until he could burst a bag.

Earl Caddock is probably the most skilled of all the big wrestlers, and the cleanest. He has no crippling specialty, although at times he uses the old Gotch toe hold. He weighs only 188 pounds and has the clean lines of a boxer rather than the bulky brawn of a mat artist. Caddock lost the championship to Stecher only after he had been in the army through the war and out of competition for a couple of years.

Turkish Steam Roller.

Nouroulah, the gigantic 400 pound Turk, who was nearly seven feet tall and built like a steam roller, started the rough stuff in wrestling circles years ago. The Turk used to pull his man down and lie on him, after which he'd calmly move his huge bulk forward and back and roll his helpless opponent flat as a pancake. I saw him do that to Tom Jenkins, and when he rolled out Roeber, all I could see of the Dutchman was an arm or a leg that occasionally stuck out.

Hackenschmidt's favorite trick was to swing his man off his feet, lift him up, turn him over and drive him down on the mat head first. He knocked Tom Jenkins out with this fall and rolled Tom over before he came to. But Hack was a very clean wrestler. When he sent anyone to the hospital it was always an accident.

CLASSY TALENT FOR MAT BOUTS NEXT TUESDAY

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Wrestling fans who attend the charity show to be conducted by Mrs. Marshall Field III. at the Coliseum on Tuesday night, proceeds of which will go to institutions for crippled children, will see contests between champions and challengers which will be decided by falls or the referee's decision.

LOU TALABER.

While the general impression has gone the rounds that no talent of note will appear at the show, such is just the reverse. The grappling ability of John Pesek and Jim Londos, who will meet for the light heavyweight championship, is well known. Spyros Vorres, one of the greatest amateur wrestlers ever developed in the middle west, will attempt to wrest the welterweight title from Jack Reynolds of Cedar Rapids, Ia.

Real Class to Meyers.

Wrestling enthusiasts who saw Johnny Meyers successfully defend his middleweight title against Paul Prehn at the Coliseum last Friday night hail the little Pole as one of the greatest exponents of the game. In Lou Talaber, local challenger, Meyers will be called upon to meet a wrestler who probably knows as many arm and leg holds as the champion.

That these men must wrestle to retain or lose their titles is shown by the instructions which will be laid down by Referee Martin Delaney. According to the rules which will govern the contests, the men will wrestle one hour. If no fall occurs in this allotted time, the men must grapple for fifteen more minutes and then the referee will award the decision to the man who has done the most aggressive wrestling. If a fall occurs in half an hour or less, the winner will be determined by the best two in three falls process.

Will be No Stalling.

"As I understand it these contests will be for the championship of various classes and not exhibitions," Referee Martin Delaney said yesterday. "I urged Maj. Frederic McLaughlin, chairman of the men's executive committee to insert such a rule in their contracts. By so doing, no stalling will be tolerated and the champions can lose their titles the same as if they were pinned."

John Pesek and Jim Londos arrived yesterday and will do light work today. Talaber has been in training all fall and is ready for Meyers, while Vorres and Reynolds have been working ever since they were matched nearly three weeks ago.

Indications point that every box will be disposed of before the principals for the first bout enter the ring. One hundred and forty of the 192 boxes have been sold.

CROWDED COURSES OF FLORIDA AUGURY OF GREAT GOLF SEASON

BY JOE DAVIS.

From downstate comes word of daffodils in bloom, while at Hillsboro a fair maiden was able to dry her golden locks out of doors. Then the geese are reported to be flying north. These are signs of an early spring, and around golfing centers the predominating query is: "What are the prospects for next summer?"

Judging by the crowded conditions of the California and Florida courses, this year's volume of golf will be greater than ever. A Chicago player just back from southern Florida says there are as crowded as Jackson park.

International Competition.

From a competitive viewpoint it will be the greatest in the history of the game. The United States is sending players to compete in the British amateur, open, and women's championships, and while the makeup of the amateur contingent is uncertain the professional and women's invading forces will be stronger than in preceding years.

There is no doubt several British amateurs will come over for our national title event, and the visit of George Duncan and Abe Mitchell will give the open championship the same international character it had last year at Toledo.

Schedule of Big Features.

All of the big events on both sides of the water have been scheduled to start as follows:

May 23—British amateur championship at Hoylake, England.
May 30—British women's championship at Turnberry, Scotland.
June 30—British open at St. Andrews.
July 11—Western amateur at Westmoreland.
July 18—National open at Columbia G. C.
Aug. 24—Western open at Cleveland.
Sept. 17—National amateur at St. Louis Country club.
Oct. 3—Women's national at Hollywood, N. J.

Chicago Beach to Play at Hinsdale Hockey Rink

Hockey teams representing Hinsdale and Chicago Beach will clash today on the latter's rink. The game was originally scheduled for Hinsdale, but lack of ice in the suburb caused the game to be changed. The contest will start at 2 o'clock.

PENN MAT MEN BEAT PRINCETON.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 19.—The University of Pennsylvania wrestling team defeated Princeton today in an intercollegiate league match, 16 to 150.

ROSS TO ENTER TEN HORSES IN KENTUCKY DERBY

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 18.—Commander K. L. Ross, the Canadian turfman, has ten candidates for the Kentucky Derby, according to a preliminary announcement of the Kentucky Jockey club here today. Harry Payne Whitney, the New York turfman, and E. R. Bradley of Lexington each have seven. The Whitney string is led by Tryster and Prudery. Edward F. Sims of Middletown, Ky., has four, including Leonardo II., and W. J. Salmon of New York three, including Careful. H. F. Sinclair of New York, the announcement indicates, will depend upon Inchcape and Grey Lag. T. W. O'Brien of Chicago has nominated Plutibus.

Central A. A. U. Tourney Booked for Next Month

The annual basketball tournament of the Central A. A. U. will be held at the Broadway armory March 23, 24 25, under the auspices of the Interscity Basketball league. Play will be in four divisions, 125, 135, 145 pound and heavyweight. The winning teams in each division will be awarded trophies donated by Mayor Thompson, Julian T. Fitzgerald and the Jack Shannon company. The individual players will be awarded A. A. U. championship medals.

Commodore Barry Five Rolls to Lead at Aurora

Aurora, Ill., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—The Commodore Barry five of Chicago took first place in the interstate bowling tournament here tonight with 2,869. Shooting in the same squad, the Illinois Gypsum five of Chicago landed in third place with 2,848. The Murrell Belting five of Chicago turned in 2,814. The Bergers rolled 2,570 and the Hennepin Council 2,506.

Chicago Women Take Ribbons at Pinehurst

Pinehurst, N. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Mrs. Stuyvesant Peabody and Miss Mildred Fitzhugh of Chicago carried off several of the red and yellow ribbons at the first annual woman's horse show here today. Ninety-one horses, representing 189 entries, were shown.

NIXON SIGNS WITH BRAVES.

Beaumont, Tex., Feb. 19.—Al Nixon, outfielder, sold last fall by the Beaumont Texas league club to the Boston Bravos, today signed his signed contract to the Boston club. Nixon refused the first contract sent him.

SHOTS ON THE LINKS

By JOE DAVIS

THE Flossmoor Country club, which is to be the scene of the amateur championship of the Chicago District Golf association, also will be the arena for the women's Chicago championship. Mrs. Hathaway Watson, president of the Women's Western Golf association, yesterday announced the city tournament will start July 18, lasting from Monday until Friday. Miss Elizabeth Klotz of Indian Hill is the present title holder.

The women's western championship at Westmoreland has been set for the week of Aug. 22.

Robert W. McKinlay was reelected president of the Cook County Municipal Golf association at the annual meeting. Marshall W. Moreau was reelected vice president; R. J. Wallace, secretary, and W. E. Miller was picked to succeed N. A. Fegen as treasurer.

A Chicago golfer sends from New York copy of a notice sent out by the Braeburn Country club of Massachusetts. The committee of the club appeals to the players to discontinue the use of nails in their shoes, which injure the greens and the clubhouse floors. The committee recommends the use of rubber soles.

Charles F. Thompson of Flossmoor, George Patterson, formerly of Flossmoor; Charley Herman of Exmoor, and Jack Cady of Rock Island are competing in the various tournaments around Pasadena.

MISS BLEIBTREY SETS SWIM MARK

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Feb. 19.—Ethelda Bleibtrey of Philadelphia created a new swimming record for women for 100 yards today, covering the distance in 1:04 2-5. She clipped four-fifths of a second from the old record of 1:05 1-5, made by herself at Philadelphia in July, 1920.

More than 300 Athletes Enter for Soldier Meet

Over 300 athletes representing universities, prep schools, and athletic clubs will compete in the annual handicap indoor track and field games of the First Regiment A. A. at the Michigan avenue armory next Friday and Saturday nights. Entries closed Friday, and when checked yesterday it was found that 309 individual entries had been received. Nominations have been turned over to Frank Martin, official handicapper of the Central A. A. U.

Jackson Park Skaters' Club to Hold Derby Today

The annual derby of the Jackson Park Skaters' club, postponed twice on account of weather conditions, will be held on the Midway today. The original entries, together with post nominations, will be permitted to race. The first event will start at 1 o'clock.

BADGER ICE CARNIVAL FEB. 26.

Madison, Wis., Feb. 19.—The University of Wisconsin annual ice carnival will be held Feb. 26 on Lake Mendota.

DISTRICT WINNERS OF STATE IN 3 CUSHION TITLE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ten three cushion players, winners of the championships of their respective districts, will start play in the semi-final series of the state amateur championship at Mussey's Monroe street room Wednesday night. Each of these men holds a gold medal given by the Illinois Billiard association, and in the coming series will battle for the diamond championship medal.

FRANK T. BARR.

Five of the contestants are from Chicago districts. They will compete in a round robin event and the three players finishing at the top will compete in the final series with George Sunde of Chicago, present title holder.

Field of Real Class.

So far the tournament has shown greater class than last year's event and the ultimate winner will have gone through a high class field.

The Chicago champions are:

Harry Holzer, loop district; T. E. Henry, north side; Frank Regan, west side; Ed Brayton, south side; Frank T. Barr, northwest side.

The downstate champions are:

F. W. Shober, Champaign; Otto Storer, Lawrenceville; J. F. Sitton, Jacksonville district; Bert Galpin, Peoria, and Earl Lookabaugh, Rockford.

Sutton to Play McAndless.

G. Butler Sutton and Dave McAndless will compete all this week in a balkline match at Mussey's Madison street room, starting tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Sutton in a recent practice game ran 351. As both are Chicagoans, they are playing for the city championship. Three hundred points will be played each afternoon and night.

C. E. BUCHANAN HIGH AT TRAPS

A strong, cold wind kept down scores in the handicap shoot of the Lincoln Park Gun club yesterday. C. E. Buchanan, shooting from twenty yards, won in class A, with a score of 43, C. P. Sheldon [20] getting 41.

E. Rosche [18] was first in class B, the other leaders being Dr. F. W. Belknap [18], 38; C. Annan [20], professional, 36; C. Illgard [20], 36.

C. E. Jaques [16] won in class B, with 37, the other scores being:

P. W. Beda [18], 34; L. C. Larsen [20], 34; C. S. Unrath [18], 33; U. J. Herrmann [18], 33; E. McCormick [20], 32; J. H. Barnard [16], 31; H. Herschman [18], 29; C. P. Merhof [16], 28; L. Roser [16], 27; D. C. Schroeder [20] 27; H. L. Brubacher [20], 26.

E. McCormick won the doubles event in four hours and twenty-nine minutes of wrestling. Lewis went to the mat thirty-five times in that contest, and Stecher was down twenty.

CLERGY START FIGHT ON JACK JOHNSON GO FOR BENTON HARBOR

Benton Harbor, Mich., Feb. 19.—Opposition by local clergymen to the 1921 program of Floyd Fitzsimmons, boxing promoter, was voiced today by Dr. Paul Yord, pastor of the First Congregational church, who addressed a letter to Gov. Groesbeck asking that the state take action to prevent the appearance here of Jack Johnson. The Twin City Ministerial association of Benton Harbor and St. Joseph is expected to make a similar request.

Fitzsimmons' tentative program includes, in addition to the Johnson-Harry Wills fight, Aug. 1, bouts including Jack Dempsey, Benny Leonard, and Johnny Kilbane.

ELDRED SCORES A KAYO WIN IN AMATEUR BOUTS

One knockout resulted in the amateur tryouts yesterday at the Ferretti-Forbes gymnasium. Art Reiman, who won his contest the preceding week, was stopped in the opening session by Frank Eldred with a right ham punch to the jaw. The latter boxed considerably while in the navy and is being groomed for the professional ranks by Ole Olson, veteran lightweight boxer. Summaries:

135 POUND CLASS.

Leon Barnett won from Dick Harris, three rounds.
Fred Klewitz won from Tom Doyle, three rounds.
Nick Blase won from Ed Garbe, one round.
Jimmy Ford won from George Scully, three rounds.
William Jacobs won from Clark Irwin, three rounds.

145 POUND CLASS.

Frank Eldred stopped Art Reiman, one round.
Chick Miller won from Roy Carter, three rounds.

125 POUND CLASS.

William Schweizer and Ad Pyzick drew, three rounds.

110 POUND CLASS.

UNIFORM FIELDS FOR BALL GAMES URGED BY EVANS

BY BILLY EVANS.
(American League Umpire.)

I RECENTLY read a suggestion by one of the owners of the Brooklyn National league club that a civil engineer be hired to inspect all major league parks, so that conditions in all would be uniform. It seems the suggestion resulted from observations made by the Brooklyn owner at the world series games in Cleveland. While not claiming the fault affected the outcome of the series, the magnate claimed the home plate at Cleveland was so placed it made a slight difference in the distance from home to third and home to first.

BILLY EVANS

I have umpired hundreds of games at the Cleveland park and am positive such a condition does not exist. I regard the Cleveland field as one of the best kept ball parks. However, I feel there is merit in the suggestion that a civil engineer be appointed to survey all the parks so that all will be uniform. Such an engineer would probably find many conditions that he would recommend be changed.

Should Not Tamper.

One feature that should be ruled against is tampering with base lines. We will assume the third baseman on a certain team is a good hitter, a fine base runner, but only an ordinary fielder, who is weak on handling bunts. Desiring to keep him in the game for his hitting and speed, the manager sets about to do something that will bolster up his fielding.

Perhaps the easiest and most effective method is to alter the grade of the third base line. Instead of having it almost perfectly level, a slight incline is given toward foul territory, so that bunted balls will invariably roll foul. Such tactics are unfair, anything but sportsmanlike, and should be eliminated.

Grade Should Be Uniform.

I also think the grade of every infield should be uniform. Under the present rules there is a certain limitation as to the height of the pitchers' box. It cannot be any higher than certain specifications, but does not have to be that high. Such a rule tends for a lack of uniformity, because most managers will arrange the style of the mound to suit their pitching material.

Certain pitchers are at their best working from a high mound, while others lose control when pitching from such a position. It is necessary that the infield have a slight grade from center for drainage purposes, if no other. But it does seem as if some of the managers are overdoing the practice to add to the effectiveness of their pitching staff. These are just two conditions that might be remedied by the survey of a competent engineer. Undoubtedly there are many others.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST

BY A. R. METCALFE

IMPORTANCE OF DEUCES.

WASHINGTON'S birthday last year found an article in THE TRIBUNE on the message which the deuce carries under different circumstances.

Throughout the year people have been asking about it and it is now given again. Cut it out and paste it in your text-book. Here it is:

The deuce, symbol of insignificance, byword of ages, too low even to be scorned, next to nothing at all,—nevertheless, of immense importance and usefulness in a greater variety of forms than any card except the ace.

A beginner looks at sevens, eights, and nines for information and does not notice lower cards at all, but when he is able to dispense with swaddling clothes, he learns that the lumbering sevens, eights, and nines have little informative value, the really useful cards being deuces and treys—particularly deuces.

Below are given a few of the messages which the deuce carries to the partner of the player using them:

Against a no-trump declaration, an original lead of a deuce indicates that the leader has exactly four cards in the suit led and no suit of more than four.

When a deuce is led to partner's declared suit, the leader has no more; and the partner knows every card held in that suit by the declarer.

When a player returns the deuce after winning the trick in his partner's suit, he likewise shows no more, and the partner knows all of the declarer's cards in that suit.

When a trump has been declared, and a high card led, the play of the deuce indicates either a singleton or more than two; with two cards in suit the partner would echo.

Against a no-trump declaration when the third player contributes a deuce to his partner's lead, it shows an original holding of not more than three cards in that suit. Having more than three, the third player would play his third best and then play up.

When a player's first discard is the deuce, the partner is asking to protect that suit if possible. The player of the deuce shows absolute weakness, as he cannot be starting an echo.

The lowest card of a suit carries the same meaning as the deuce, provided the partner is able to identify it as the lowest card the player may hold.

CARDS OF EXIT.

SO many people are unable to understand what a card of exit signifies; a simple illustration is given in the deal which follows:

THE HANDS.

S—A, Q, 8, 6.
H—K, J, 9, 6.
C—A, K, 3.
D—10, 5.

S—4, 2.
H—A, Q, 5.
C—Q, 10, 7, 5.
D—A, K, J, 6.

S—K J, 9, 7, 5, 3.
H—8, 4.
C—8, 4.
D—9, 3, 2.

S—10.
H—10, 7, 3, 2.
C—J, 9, 6, 2.
D—Q, 8, 7, 4.

THE BIDDING.

North dealt and bid one no trump, east and south passed, west doubled, north passed, east bid two spades, south passed, west bid two no trumps, and the bidding closed. North had the initial lead.

THE PLAY.

Tricks.	N.	E.	S.	W.
1	H6	H4	H10	HQ
2	6S	JS	10S	2S
3	D5	D2	D4	DJ
4	AS	3S	H3	4S
5	HK	H8	H7	HA
6	D10	D3	D7	DA
7	8S	D9	D8	DK
8	H9	4C	H2	H5
9	HJ	8C	2C	D6
10	AC	5S	6C	5C
11	KC	7S	9C	7C
12	3C	9S	JC	QC
13	QS	KS	DQ	10C

West secured eight tricks.

It would have been easier to make two spades, but west had no right to leave his partner in after forcing the bid unless he could help spades.

The play is given as it should have been, but in the original the declarer lost 100 points by allowing the king of hearts to win at trick 5.

The five of hearts was the most important card held by the declarer, being his only card of exit at that time. It was necessary to make north lead one of the black suits, and west could only accomplish that by first depriving north of diamonds and then putting him in with a heart.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—[To the Editor.]—Will you please give me your opinion on the following:

North—Clubs: Ace, king. Spades: Ace, queen, 10, 4. Diamonds: Ace, king, 10, 8. Hearts: King, jack, 10.

South—Clubs: Queen, 10, 9, 8, 7, 5. Hearts: 8, 4. Spades: 9, 7. Diamonds: Queen, 9, 7.

Score is lee apiece and north and south have 27 on the second leg. North opens bid with one no trump, east passes, south bids two clubs, west passes, north bids two no trump, east passed, south passed, and west passed. North contends that his partner bid the hand poorly in not going to three clubs over two no trump bid. Is this true and did south not do his entire duty when he went to two clubs? Will you please advise through your bridge column? JAY EFF.

North should have allowed two clubs to stand; I do not think south should have gone to three clubs. Two no trump bid indicated everything but clubs.

BONDS IN TUESDAY'S ELECTION.

The city must pay its bills and pay the wages of its employés, but to pay them out of bond issues is an unsafe way. A citizen who year by year was living beyond his income, and who was borrowing money to pay his bills, would know he was on the way to bankruptcy.

The city must make its income and its expenses balance, either by increasing the income or by decreasing the expense. It can get an increase in income by persuading the legislature to raise the tax rate. It can decrease its expenses by conducting city affairs economically. The cure is in one of the two, or in both.

If the city hall wishes to stand pat on its statement that it cannot reduce expenses, it must get more money and the citizens must give it more money. There is a defiant answer in the hall to every suggested economy, and we might as well proceed on the theory that the administration does not intend to reduce expenditures.

There never was and there never will be an audit of what politics costs the city and what municipal service costs. The two are inextricable. If the citizens knew what politics costs, they might see where the cuts could be made. If they look merely at such salaries as are paid policemen and firemen, they know that no cuts can be made here. Such essential servants are not paid enough. Political servants may be paid ruinously.

Assuming that there will be no reduction in expenses, then the income must be increased. The increase must come from taxation. If it is necessary to double the tax rate to provide the money, the tax rate must be doubled.

If, in the event of no decrease in expenditures, every taxpayer must pay twice the amount of money to the city collector that he has been paying, he will have to pay it. That is sound municipal financing.

The bond scheme of Mayor Thompson is an evasion of this sound financing, of both phases of it. He dodges both the responsibility of raising more money and the responsibility of decreasing expenditures.

Mr. Thompson says that tax dodgers are opposing his financial scheme. A very little reflection will convince any citizen that again the city is being saddled by experts. Chicago is held down by law to a very low bonded debt. Thompson's own figures show that New York has a debt of $175 per capita, Baltimore, Boston, and Cleveland over $100, Pittsburgh $93, etc., and Chicago only $28.55.

That is merely the municipal corporation. Chicago has many bonding bodies. The municipal bonds are for permanent improvements. To make a misuse of them is to deprive the city of permanent improvements. If bonds are used to pay current expenses, permanent improvements will not be made.

If the city administration asked for authority to issue $8,000,000 in bonds for a meritorious permanent improvement, the city probably would grant the authority. The last time Thompson recommended an issue of bonds there was distrust, and he was denied authority; but he created the distrust. A fair proposition will get a fair response, and if $8,000,000 in bonds are not deflected to the payment of current expenses, they will be issued later for permanent improvements; and so far as the tax dodger is concerned it will be just the same, although vastly different for the city.

A tax dodger, caring nothing about the city, would support the mayor's bad scheme of recuperation because he would think it less expensive to him. In fact it will be very expensive, but he might not see that. An evasion of straightforward methods generally is expensive and sometimes ruinous. It is bad because it is so easy. If you can run $8,000,000 over expenses once and get away with it, why not again? Why have any sound financial principles in the city hall if it is possible to pay bills by issuing twenty year bonds?

There is a fair principle in bonds for permanent improvements, because the people to whom the debt is passed along will enjoy the improvements. It is not a fair principle to pass a butcher bill along to people who never saw the steak.

If the people of Chicago are not paying enough every year to run the city government, they must pay more. If it requires twice as much, they must pay twice as much. If tax dodgers are the blight of the city, Mayor Thompson has the remedy in his own hands. He is the political authority for all official action in Chicago and Cook county and he is supposed to control the legislature. Gov. Small is his political creation. Everything is in his hand. Talking about tax dodging will not increase the city revenues. We suggest that Mr. Thompson act as well as talk.

We suspect that Mr. Thompson is afraid to meet squarely any issue involved in this situation. If he is not afraid, he will say that current income must meet current expenses. The city of Chicago will pay its bills.

CONTROL OF HAWAII.

The Japanese in Hawaii already constitute a serious problem affecting the future of the islands. Hawaii is an outpost of the United States and must be retained. We believe that it is policy to permit the Philippines to go their way, but Hawaii is vital and must be retained.

A federal survey commission headed by Dr. Frank F. Bunker of Washington has found that the momentum of the Japanese race on the islands puts all other racial groups out of the running. There are 109,274 Japanese in the population. The next racial group is the Portuguese with 27,002.

The Japanese are industrious, orderly and progressive. They want land. They set up business establishments and engage in the professions. They are admirable, no doubt, as inhabitants, but it is precisely by such habits of settlement and occupation and by such virtues that a race changes the sovereignty of a land and establishes dominion.

Soon if Hawaii belonged politically to the people who actually dominate it, it would be Japanese, and that is the prospect which an invaluable American possession faces. The solution probably is a military government. The United States cannot maintain satisfactory control over Hawaii if the political power goes to the Japanese, as in the course of population growth it will.

An American navy superior to that of Japan assures possession of the islands and a military government may be the method by which the United States can govern.

WHEN LABOR BLOCKS ITS OWN PROGRESS.

With some 3,500,000 men out of employment in the United States at the present time, the ordinary activities of labor organizations are considerably altered. Instead of devoting their efforts to obtaining higher wages, shorter hours, and better working conditions they are now busy fighting to retain these advantages from the disintegrating influence of idleness.

Obtaining and retaining jobs are the two chief interests of the individual worker. Such interests emphasize individualism and weaken unionism. For this reason in present conditions it is essential that organized labor take up the task of putting its membership into jobs. To do so it must first analyze the conditions which have put the workers out of jobs.

One East Chicago factory man who dismissed a tenth of his force last fall found production increased. He dismissed another tenth with the same result. A third tenth was let out with similar results. No more positive proof could be asked that the original force had been doing less than seven-tenths of a day's work. In that way they had been adding to the cost of their product and eventually helped to bring on the reaction and the buyer's strike.

One loop building contractor found his bricklayers were laying twice as many bricks last November as in November, 1919. Fear of losing their jobs in a slack period made them do a fair day's work. When they had been doing half a day's work for the same pay they were adding uselessly to the cost of building, thereby discouraging construction and keeping other building craftsmen and eventually themselves out of jobs. Similar instances have been noted in the building material trades. By decreasing output and thereby raising costs they have helped to discourage building and so reduced the demand for their services and the services of hundreds of thousands of fellow craftsmen.

In such matters as the so-called "door trust" in Chicago the workers have gone even farther. By refusing to allow the use of any millwork except that made in Chicago union shops the workers, in combination with the mill men, helped to restrict building to such an extent that thousands of men, both union and nonunion, were deprived of employment. Such things weaken the whole cause of organized labor.

Sidney Webb, probably the leading authority among the economists on the subject of union labor, and distinctly sympathetic toward unionism, has said on this subject: "In the painful 'Pilgrim's Progress' of democracy the workers will be constantly tempted into bypaths that lead only to the Slough of Despond. It is not so much the enticing away of individuals in the open pursuit of wealth that is to be feared as the temptation of the particular trade unions, or the particular sections of the workers, to enter into alliances with associations of capitalist employers for the exploitation of the consumer."

This is practically what has been done in such combinations as the "door trust" deal in Chicago and in the blackmail cases of New York. They are dangerous errors in organized labor policy. That they are the result of policy, not ignorance, is the assertion of no less an authority and student of the subject than R. F. Hoxie, American economist and author of "Trade Unionism in the United States." On this point Mr. Hoxie says:

"The trade union program—or rather the trade union programs, for each trade union has a program of its own—is not the unrelated economic demands and methods which it is usually conceived to be, but a closely integrated social philosophy and plan of action. . . . It expresses the workers' social theory and the rules of the game to which they are committed, not only in industry but in social affairs generally."

Union labor has done much to promote the welfare of the workingman. It has also done much to retard his welfare and to throw him out of employment at present. If it wishes to retain the advantages it should eliminate the evils.

Editorial of the Day

FIGHTING VS. TODDLING.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

"It would be better to have the sons of the city putting on gloves to fight than to have the daughters of the city taking off corsets to toddle." So argues THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE in a plea for legalized boxing in Chicago. Pussyfooting youths and ribald women are certainly a sign of decadence. When men become effeminate they take on woman's weaknesses, not her strength; similarly when women become masculinized they borrow only the worse parts of masculinity.

Of such exchange is made racial deterioration. Otherwise, men could be mollycoddles and women could stride and swear—each having taken on the better qualities of the other—and the race would retain its virility. Is there not some scientific explanation for what actually happens? History divulges the causes of decadence, but not the cause of those causes.

The Romans fell before the large fair haired men of the north. They could not resist the great virility of the barbaric tribes. Rome's man power had declined. The masses of society were affected by the effeminate luxury of the aristocracy. But the paucity of men was due to a deep aversion to marriage. Single life allowed the Roman too much comfort and license. With a large family he could not indulge an extravagant penchant for pleasure.

The Roman, in other words, had become soft boiled, to reverse a modern expression. THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE is right in holding that fighting men are a much healthier sign of a strong civilization than uncorseted women. In so far as boxing matches stimulate spectators to try the sport themselves, they are wholesome, and should be encouraged.

Too often, however, professional boxing is not what it should be. THE TRIBUNE must go farther than the prize ring if it wants a virile race. That is attained only by bringing healthy children—lots of them—into the world.

THE DIFFICULTY.

Thomas A. Edison says he believes it will be possible to devise a machine by which the dead will be able to communicate with the living, but "You have the wrong exchange" might just about monopolize the line.—Detroit News.

A LINE O' TYPE OR TWO

How to the Line, let the quips fall where they may.

IMMUTABLE.

Take your Main Street, then,
You novelists,
Work your will on it.
Exchange the carpenter's hammer
For the steam shovel and electric crane;
Send aloft the riveters
To loose their metallic racket.
Then transplant it to the coast;
Lay at its foot
Tribute from the Seven Seas;
Bring foreigners to clean and police it.
Still up and down, up and down,
In and out of the shops, theaters,
Lecture halls, what-nots, that line it,
Will pass the endless procession
Of hicks and rubes.

WE have on hand a column of favorite wheezes sent in response to our invitation, and the only reason we have not printed them is the preponderance of our own stuff. Naturally, or not, we are better amused by the wheezes of contributors. Frexample the following evoked a smile:

"ON the train running into Tulsa," wrote a gadder, "a native was fooling with the roller curtain, when suddenly it flew up with a snap. He looked bewildered, stuck his head out of the window, and finally said to himself, 'Well, I reckon that's the last they'll see of that derned thing!'"

THE THOUSAND AND ONE AFTERNOONS.

XI.

Naturally (continued the fair Saidee) the spirit of romance works more powerfully in one unaccustomed to it than in one who, like my brother, had traveled and enjoyed adventures in all parts of the world. Therefore the effect of the pink shirt on the prosaic importer was as potent as hashish would have been. No sooner had he seen the shirt, as I have said, than he desired to wear it; no sooner had he put it on, than he desired to roam the thoroughfares of Chicago, which hitherto he had considered unworthy of inspection; and no sooner had he left the hotel than the city became as enchanting as Samarcand, and the most commonplace man in the world was as ripe for adventure as a First or Second Calender. He had not walked many minutes when a cluster of electric lights before a playhouse drew his attention to a musical extravaganza called 'Bagdad,' and presently he was among the audience. Before this experience he had thought of the Orient as a place from which spices were imported, but now he realized that women were its greatest glory. The stage was gay with singing houris, only a little more dazzling than the women in the chairs about him, and he was the only member of the audience who regretted the drop of the curtain. When he left the playhouse it occurred to him, for the first time in his drab existence, that a midnight supper would round out an evening of unexampled pleasure, so he turned into a café in which were a great many lights, a great many people, and a great deal of music from a band. The head waiter gave him one glance and then seated him at a table behind a post, but hard by there was a larger table at which a fat man, whose neck overflowed his collar, was entertaining three miracles of female loveliness. It seemed to Mr. Weatherwax, as his eyes fell upon these radiant creatures, that nature had quite outdone herself and that further effort could result only in an anticlimax. As he gazed blinkingly at their dazzling beauty the cork from a bottle of champagne which their waiter was opening slipped from the menial's fingers and took Mr. Weatherwax squarely upon the nose. The three beauties laughed until they fell backward when he clapped a hand to his smarting feature and took up dazedly the small projectile, but he counted the bombardment a fortunate accident when the most radiant of the trio (if one could be said to be more effulgent than another) dispatched their male companion to Mr. Weatherwax with a request that he join them in a glass of the champagne and bury his injured nose in the bubbles of the wine.

IS CONSUMPTION CURABLE?

CAN a person be permanently cured of consumption? For this question the insurance companies have an answer. Mr. Arthur Hunter of the New York Life Insurance company, basing his reply on thousands of experiences gives that reply. We understand that the insurance companies decide such questions according to the law of averages. There is no consideration of individuals or hope or fear or sentiment of any sort.

This is what they have found out: If the cured consumptive is twenty pounds underweight his chance of living out the life expectancy of a man his age is one-half the normal. If he is twenty pounds overweight he is almost up to the normal. Therefore, cured consumptives should always keep fat.

If he has lived to be 45 years old he has a fine chance to reach average age.

The life insurance agents issuing such risks are told to instruct them to keep themselves overweight and to follow the rules regarding fresh air and food. A history of tuberculosis of the bone adds 50 per cent as much risk as does one of tuberculosis of the lungs.

Scrofula has fallen from its high estate. Once known as king's evil and regarded with great dread, now the insurance companies rate it as only one-third as much of a hazard as tuberculosis of the lungs.

DIABETES—Sugar may appear in the urine for a day or two as the result of gorging on sugar or candy or overeating bread or some other starchy food. If the symptom is found only once or is plainly the result of an eating debauch the insurance companies are apt to accept the insurance at the regular rates on the theory that a man who has been made aware of the effects of a food debauch will behave himself thereafter.

If sugar is found intermittingly there is considerable danger, and the rate goes up 50 per cent. If it is found constantly the rate goes up 100 per cent. In other words, an ordinary diabetic can get insurance, but at a double rate. If he has acetone as well as sugar the condition is too serious to warrant insurance. The statement is made:

"In general sugar is a more serious condition than albumin in the urine."

Those who have sugar in the urine even intermittingly must live strictly according to the rules of hygiene for diabetes.

PLEURISY—The experiences of life insurance companies prove pleurisy to be a serious condition. By pleurisy is meant genuine pleurisy and not the miscellaneous lot of vague pains loosely referred to as pleurisy pains. If a person has had an attack of pleurisy within five years his insurance rate goes up 50 per cent. If more than five years, 15 per cent.

The death rate from consumption is three times the normal in the first group and twice the normal in the second. The disease which a person who has had pleurisy should learn to avoid is consumption. To avoid consumption keep above weight, avoid great fatigue, sleep out of doors, and stay in the open air as much as possible.

DEALER WILL GET THEM.

M. C. writes: "My husband has diabetes. Would you please tell me where I can procure Joslin's or Hill & Eckman's manual for diabetics? He is 60 years old. Can he expect to be cured?"

REPLY.

Any bookseller will order them for you. As a rule diabetes is not so severe in old people as in young ones. The chance of cure depends on many factors not alluded to in your letter.

THE HARDY REPORTER.

W. B. W. writes: "I am a reporter in my sixty-seventh year. On Jan. 9 of this year at Boston I swam more than fifty strokes in water thirty-feet deep. Then I walked three miles. After that I ate a hearty dinner and then slept soundly all night. I have been doing this stunt of winter swimming for sixteen years. My son has asthma. He has found that he is worse after heavy smoking. On days when he smokes little his asthma is better. He now limits himself to a short smoke after each meal and finds that his asthma is much less troublesome."

REPLY.

Some persons suffer with asthma because of sensitiveness to tobacco. It is probable that your son is one of these.

BABY IS DOING WELL.

M. T. writes: "I have a baby boy 6 weeks old. He weighed eight pounds when born and now weighs nine and three-fourths. Is that gaining enough? He is breast fed and I can only get him to nurse from ten to fifteen minutes and then he wakes up and cries about a half hour before the next feeding. Should I try feeding him every two and one-half hours? At night he sleeps five and six hours without waking. Should I wake him every three hours to feed?"

REPLY.

Keep your baby at the breast. Do not supplement the breast milk. Most babies do better when fed at longer intervals. Try yours on a two and one-half hour interval plan. When he is 3 months old go to a three hour interval and a little later to four hours. Do not awaken him for a feeding.

STRIKES WITHOUT WARNING.

Mrs. H. M. writes: "1. What causes embolus of the lung? Is embolus just a technical term for blood clot? 2. Is there no way to foresee or prevent it? 3. Is it nearly always fatal? 4. What kind of a drug is codein? 6. Is it given to stimulate the heart or just to alleviate pain?"

REPLY.

1. Embolus means a clot or obstruction found elsewhere and swept by the bloodstream to its lodging place. Most, but not all emboli are blood clots. The causes are many. Among them are dislodged fat in fractured bones, dislodged pelvic clots in labor cases, dislodged heart clots in heart troubles.

2. In most cases it strikes suddenly and without warning.

3. Frequently, but not always, nor in most cases.

4. Codein is derived from opium and is akin to morphine.

5. To alleviate pain.

RAW MILK PROBABLE CAUSE.

V. M. K. writes: "What causes tuberculosis in newborn babies? Is it possible for a woman to bear such children and be free from it herself? Can children so born thrive? Is it contracted or inherited?"

REPLY.

There are a few recorded cases of congenital tuberculosis. The more likely explanation is infection through drinking raw milk from tuberculous cows. Close contact with a person having tuberculosis is a cause occasionally. When a woman free from tuberculosis has a tuberculous baby, the probability is that it was infected through milk. A great many tuberculous children recover and become strong men and women.

NATURE DOES THE WORK.

J. A. B. writes: "Occasionally I should like to wash out my nasal cavities to free them from dust collections, etc., and to aid nature in overcoming a somewhat dry catarrhal condition therein. May I ask what sort of simple solution you would recommend for use as a nasal douche to accomplish these aims? What probable effects on the senses of hearing and smelling would such a practice have? Two different solutions were described to me by a layman, but I hesitate to use either without knowing more about their merits or demerits. One was a teaspoonful mixture of equal parts table salt and common baking soda in a pint of lukewarm water. The other was a teaspoonful mixture of table salt, baking soda, and ordinary borax in a pint of lukewarm water. Do you consider either of these of any value, and, if so, which is the better?"

REPLY.

Both are stock nasal douches or washes. One is as good or bad as the other. For all ordinary purposes the nasal secretions do all necessary washing. Douches and washes do more harm than good. If you want to use something use an oil or grease.

COLD FLAT.

Chicago, Feb. 10.—[Friend of the People.]—Is it lawful for a tenant to complain to the health department about a cold flat? The tenant in one apartment keeps the front room window open even in zero weather and keeps the radiators covered with pads which prevent them from giving proper heat. The people in the other apartments in the building say that there is plenty of heat with the radiators only half turned on.

A careful investigation was made by an inspector from this department, from whose report it appears that there is insufficient evidence of a nuisance to justify action by this department.

INSURANCE ACCUMULATES.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—[Friend of the Soldier.]—A buddy of mine, and life-long friend, named me as the beneficiary of his insurance. He has no living relatives. He was killed during the war, but the war insurance bureau does not pay me the money. I have heard that I cannot collect it. Please advise.

C. F.

Under the present provisions of the war risk insurance act, persons not in a certain designated class cannot collect the insurance. This "permitted class" of beneficiaries includes practically only blood relations of the deceased.

It is very probable that in time the permitted class of beneficiaries of this government insurance will be increased and possibly under such regulations you could claim the insurance. At present you cannot collect it.

CALIFORNIA ESTATE.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—When a person dies in the state of California, how long does it take before the estate comes to probate? 2. Hasn't congress passed a law that all foreigners have to take out citizenship papers? H. W.

ANOTHER PROFITEER.

Chicago, Feb. 13.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A man takes an apartment on a "sublet" and there are two months to run on the lease. The original renter paid only $50 a month, but the agent now says that for these two months to this man he will charge $95 a month besides a renting fee. It is much more than the flat is worth. Is the agent acting within his rights?

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

A TENANT'S ARGUMENT FOR RENT RESTRICTION.

Chicago, Feb. 17.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The stringency of the house or flat renting situation is such that those who are suffering from it naturally are seeking for some kind of corrective. The conditions are abnormal. The law of supply and demand has ceased to operate. Generally an excessive demand calls forth the supply necessary to meet it. This is a law of economics. Ordinarily it regulates prices with precision. It is dangerous to tamper with this law by an arbitrary exercise of power, and such interference with it is almost certainly followed by evils greater than those it is sought to cure. There are, however, at times conditions which suspend the normal laws of trade. War is such a condition. In the case of rentals the war did not have its effect as soon as in most cases. In fact, it was not until the year of the armistice that rents became abnormal. It was then discovered that the supply of dwellings had diminished to such an extent that the power of those who had them to rent became arbitrary and oppressive. War conditions prevented building. Rents have not yet yielded to the conditions of peace. The war emergency which swelled the prices of wheat and coal to an extraordinary degree is still on in rents; the owners of dwellings have a monopoly. This is a menace to public welfare. Cruel distress is inflicted on tens of thousands of people by the abuse of the power which the conditions created by the war have put into the hands of this minority.

Some governmental agency is needed to bring relief, as was done in the case of other commodities during the war. It is on this ground alone that the legislation sought for can be justified. It ought to be temporary; but the present emergency which is a war condition calls for a war measure for the time being. The resumption of building would not be prevented when circumstances favor it, if a limit of time were put upon the legislation and if it were known that governmental regulation is not to be a permanent policy. E. M.

THE RIGHT TO LABOR.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Americans are prone to boast of the inexhaustive wealthy resources we have in mines, minerals, agricultural soil, timberlands, cotton plantations, etc., and well we may. Yet, withal, notwithstanding that the Creator has been exceptionally kind to America in providing possibilities of return for good honest toil by brain or brawn, there are many deserving willing workers today who are standing in the "bread line" instead of reaping the benefits a bountiful nature intended.

Let's be sincere in our efforts to help our fellow men. Our soldier boys should not be in want. American citizens have no excuse for going hungry in this wealthy country of ours. Whether a professional man, tradesman, mechanic, or common laborer, the willing worker is not only entitled to a decent wage but to all the blessings God gives mankind.

H. SCHLICKER.

CONCERNING JAPS AND ASSES.

Chicago, Feb. 13.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Until I saw the Vox Pop this morning I was not aware that Milwaukee also stabled the king of these long eared quadrupeds.

Who is the greatest ass, I wonder—he who comes in daily contact with an ever increasing menace and takes steps to mitigate it or efface it entirely or he who in the power of his own great ego obstinately, stubbornly refuses to recognize the real dangers that confront him and denies to others the privilege of protecting themselves?

He who says there is no Japanese menace either does not speak from actual experience or is too much of an ass to profit by it. Has our Milwaukee critic lived in California? I have. Has he come in contact with the Japs? I have, and while they are an industrious sober people, they cannot be Americanized. Has he seen hardworking Americans forced out of their farms by Japs who, because of their lower standard of living, are able to undersell their products? I have. Has he seen the Japs establish their local monopoly and then put prices up again? I have. Has he seen them save their money and then go back to Japan with it? I have. Has he ever seen them make any real addition to the community, any real improvements, or accomplish any real service? I have NOT.

And I have seen Japs who were spies in the houses where they were servants, and I have seen Japs caught drawing plans of American fortifications and strategic points.

I am not a jingoist, and I do not want war—but the surest road to a war with Japan is to allow them to increase their California foothold until they feel strong enough to demand more.

FRANCIS H. EVANS.

NOT WISHING THE GENT ANY HARD LUCK.

Harvey, Ill., Feb. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I wish there were more words in the English language with which I could express my contempt for one R. C. Taylor of Racine, Wis., whose letter berating the ex-soldiers of the world war was published under Voice of the People Feb. 14. And he has the audacity to call himself a real American. He is an insult to the country that protects and provides for his cowardly carcass; and although I never wished anything disagreeable to come to any one, I would feel content if I could see any man (?) who would make such statements about the American soldier of the recent war go through such hell as the battles of Belleau wood and the Argonne forest. I would like to look on and laugh at him crazed by the bite of mustard gas blisters, being shipped home in the lower hatch of a cattle boat, then ask him his opinion.

A yellow cur would not bite those who protected it. If it did, it should be shot.

Postal and print restrictions prevent me from saying herein what I'd like to. Page Mr. Dawes. HUBERT H. EVERS,

WHO GETS THE MONEY?

Chicago, Feb. 13.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In view of the present discussion and action of the city council on the supposed profiteering of the retail fruit and vegetable dealer, I wish to say that it is almost impossible for this retailer to profiteer. He buys his produce fresh every day—that is, if he caters to any ordinary American housewife—and puts it out for sale at a reasonable profit. Before half the day has passed the produce in question, being perishable, begins to show the effects of being handled and inspected by the thrifty housewives.

Accordingly the merchant lowers to cost price the article in question in order that he may at least "break even" on the article. And before the day is done he is accepting any price the customer offers, as the article cannot be kept for the next day. So there you are.

Therefore he does not believe in a small volume of business with high prices, for the risk is too great—he may lose it all. And so he always is in favor of a large volume at reasonable prices. S. L.

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

BY FANNY BUTCHER.

Last week's best sellers at a leading Chicago book store were:

FICTION.

"Main Street" [Harcourt], by Sinclair Lewis.
"Mysterious Rider" [Harpers], by Zane Grey.
"Mary Wollaston" [Bobbs-Merrill], by Henry Kitchell Webster.
"Poor Wise Man" [Doran], by Mary Roberts Rinehart.
"House of Dreams-Come-True" [Doran], by Margaret Pedler.
"In the Mountains" [Doubleday-Page], Anonymous.

NONFICTION.

"Outline of History" [Macmillan], by H. G. Wells.
"The Sea and the Jungle" [Dutton], by H. M. Tomlinson.
"The New Jerusalem" [Doran], by G. K. Chesterton.

The six best circulators at the public library last week were:
"Main Street," by Sinclair Lewis.
"Moon-Calf," by Floyd Dell.
"Enemies of Women," by Blasco Ibanez.
"Outline of History," by H. G. Wells.
"Steeplejack," by James Gibbons Huneker.
"Autobiography of Margot Asquith."

THERE is just time between now and Wednesday, when G. K. Chesterton arrives, to read his two new books, "The New Jerusalem" and "The Uses of Diversity"; just time and none to spare on a mystery story or another chapter or two of "The Outline of History" because, although "The Uses of Diversity" is a collection of his gayest, slap-stickiest, most paradoxical bits of writing about whatever happened to brush its butterfly wings against his mind week by week, it is not "quick" reading. And, "The New Jerusalem" isn't gay or slap-sticky at all, and it is decidedly "slow" reading.

The volume of essays is, like its title, life—the fundamentals of time-honored phrases—squinted at by a gentleman who always looks at the embroidery, turns is over, and says, "Here, you see, it's not alike on both sides. It's machine stitched."

Mr. Chesterton is one of the few writers who may rightly be called "clever." He's so clever that he isn't clever at all. If he doesn't stand on his head, dance a hornpipe with his right arm and a fandango with his left leg on every page you say, "Poor thing. He's going all to pieces. He used to be so clever." Myself, I like him when he's resting his ample form on his own private feet and talking with his lips and not his assorted limbs. Too much cleverness enervates instead of stimulates my mind. It's like going on "The Whip" at Coney Island—you start sou' by sou'east, and before you get there you feel like a compass with electric fever. It's a literary thrill none of us would miss, though. We like feeling all dizzy and everything.

"The New Jerusalem" is a serious book, though not half so serious as every one thinks it is. It does not settle the Zionist problem, as a few prominent readers have suspected. It does not point out the storage place of the milk and honey with which our mother, dear Jerusalem, is blest. Nor does it provide the comforts promised for heart and mind oppressed. Mr. Chesterton has kept his sense of humor, but, in his journey to Jerusalem, he felt the touch of the eternal power of the idea of the city, and didn't caper.

The book is a record of a trip to the Holy City, but it is infinitely more. It is an interpretation of one city in its inherent oneness with cultures which stamped themselves upon it. It is, he says, the village of the crusaders, still, filled with their spirit, almost their spirits.

A tabloid review is not only unfair, but it is impossible about a book like "The New Jerusalem" which is not, like "The Outline of History," a monument to an idea, but is merely a group of scattered impressions and reflections. One leaves it with unblurred memories of phrases, of ideas, of brilliant scraps of philosophy, but with no memory of one bright light concentrated on one memorable idea.

As for the Zionist part of it, Mr. Chesterton devotes one chapter only to it, and he capers a little in it before he sits down and looks it sternly in the eye. The Zionist movement does, to him, answer the Semitic problem, or will, he thinks, if the Jews who settle there become peasants, really feel the land, clamp their roots into it. Usury and lack of patriotism are the undeniable causes for the hatred of the Jew, he thinks. Given a country of their own they will have an opportunity to convince the world that their cardinal faults are their surface protection and not their ideals.

On Wednesday evening he will lecture at Orchestra hall. He will be in Chicago for one day only, according to his present schedule. And he once said in print that he longed to see this one of the greatest cities of the world!

This week Chicago was what Mr. H. L. Mencken called it—the literary capital of America. There were present ambassadors from Main Street, England, and the South Seas—Sinclair Lewis, John Drinkwater, and Frederick O'Brien. Sinclair Lewis, of whom one of his best friends says, "God spoiled the best monologist in the world by giving Hal Lewis brains enough to be a great author," came to our town to give us a few well-chosen remarks on the state of the world in general and of the American novel in particular. John Drinkwater, father of "Abraham Lincoln"—O, you know what I mean—came to tell us what is art, and so forth. And Frederick O'Brien, father, mother, son, and press agent extraordinary of the South Seas, came to catch a train to New York, and so he wasn't literary at all, just friendly. Mr. Drinkwater says that the amazing hospitality which Americans have for foreign visitors is the flowering of a national consciousness of the common humanness and friendliness of our great men of the past—especially "Mr. Lincoln," as he says he hears so many Americans calling him. And when Mr. Drinkwater says such noble words about us he is every inch the charming, successful young British playwright-poet paying a visit to our Chicago Main Street. When Sinclair Lewis says that "America is just waking up to the fact that she's got some darned good writers doing some darned good books" he isn't paying a visit to Main Street. He is Main Street, heart and soul. He makes us feel that out of the millions of Main Streets stifling the dreams of millions of Carol Kennicutts there will some day come that new beauty—the real America.

Romain Rolland's new novel is on the spring list of Henry Holt & Co. "Clerambault" it is called, and it is, like everything he has done since 1914, steeped with his own reactions to the war. It tells the story of a famous French nationalistic poet who loses his only son in the conflict. He becomes an unyielding pacifist, goes through the stages of suspicion and ostracism which Rolland went through himself, and is finally put on trial. M. Rolland denies that he and his hero are one, but his denials are ineffective.

A bright lad this. The person who writes the publicity notes for B. W. Huebsch, Inc., says, in commenting on a recent lecture given by Prof. Ludwig Lewisohn in which he said that the middle west had taken on a new dignity in the matter of literary production, "This statement by Prof. Lewisohn and a recent characterization by H. L. Mencken in 'On American Books' of Chicago as the true literary center of America gives rise to an interesting speculation. Will the young literary aspirant of the future who happens to be born in the east obey the Greeley injunction to go west? Will the future Frank Norris, instead of coming to Harvard, go to Michigan or Wisconsin or Chicago? Will Gopher Prairie and Winesburg and Portage be the Meccas of literary pilgrims from the east? It is a terrible thought for Greenwich Village."

"Kaleema" is the mystic title of a novel of the stage by Marion McClelland, another daughter of our town to contract the epidemic of novella scribenda. "Kaleema" is her first attack, and she has "broken out gloriously." Miss McClelland has lived most of her life away from Chicago, but she feels that we are her people.

The few who know the lure of the pen of Norman Douglas, who think that "Old Calabria" is the most fascinating thing they have ever read, know, of course, that "South Wind," which was published unsuccessfully in America ten or so years ago, has just been brought out in a new edition and has been receiving the praise which was always its due. It's a perfectly fascinating tale of the powers of the South Wind—the releasing of primitive passion, the crocodilelike basking in the sun, the sudden clicking of enormous jaws. The crocodile is metaphorical, but of such tropical beasts and emotions is "South Wind" made up. His newest book, "They Go," published in England, has created a sensation which will, one hopes, insure its American publication.

"Fifty Contemporary One Act Plays" is the direct answer to the prayer of the once-actors who have been on their knees for a reliable, workable collection of plays. These fifty, each one of which has been proved successful in amateur performances, include representative tabloid drama from all points of the civilized compass including the late German. Listen to the roster: Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, France, Germany, Great Britain, India, Ireland, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Russia, Spain, Sweden, the United States, Yiddish, and Bibliography—the most international and accomplished of all of the civilizations. Three Chicagoans are included, Susan Glaspell, who used to be and is no more; Thomas Wood Stephens, who no longer glitters in these parts, and Alice Gerstenberg, who has been a substantial prop for the impermanent amateur theatrical ventures with which Chicago breaks out annually—its winter rash of playwright workshops.

And, on the other hand, there is George Jean Nathan's "The Theatre, the Drama, the Girls," which, far from being a simple paper pattern of entertainments which may be made by ladies in the home, is that most terrifyingly alluring of all objects, the simple but elegant Paris frock (so to speak).

Mr. Nathan is, as Mr. Hammond so brilliantly and graciously suggested, an evil influence in the life of the ordinary garden-variety of writer. He is so insufferably himself, so sparklingly the last word, so obviously simple, withal, that the ordinary writing-reader of his stuff unconsciously determines to write likewise, with the obvious result that while Mr. Nathan turns out a creation with Poiret-Premiet-Callot-Paquin-et-al. written all over it, the imitator's exhibit has "Made in our own kitchens" blazoned forth upon it.

To the reader who isn't looking for literary styles to copy, he is a stimulant. "The triviality of the stage," Incidentally, there is wit of the most flashing kind in everything he writes. I can't imagine "The Theatre, the Drama, the Girls" boring anybody except a profiteer who can't read.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

AN EMPEROR'S DAUGHTER STANDS ALONE.

By Geoffrey Chaucer (1340-1400).

Have ye nat seyn som tyme a pale face
Among a press, of hym that hath be lad
Toward his deeth, where as hym gat no grace?
And swich a colour in his face hath had,
Men myghte knowe his face that was bistad,
Amonges alle the faces in that route;
So stant Custance, and looketh hire aboute.
O, queenes, lyvynge in prosperitee!
Duchesses, and ladyes everichone!
Haveth some routhe on hire adversitee.
An Emperoures doghter stant allone;
She hath no wight to whom to make hir mone!
O, blood, roial, that stondest in this drede,
Fer been thy freendes at thy grete nede!
This Alla, kyng, hath swich compossioun,
As gentil herte is fulfild of pitee,
That from hise eyen ran the water doun.
"Now hastily do fecche a book," quod he,
"And if this knyght wol sweren how that she
This woman slow, yet wol we us avyse
Whom that we wole that shall been our justise."
A Briton book written with Evaungiles
Was fet, and on this book he swore anoon
She guilty was, and in the meene whiles
An hand hym smoot upon the nekke boon,
That doun he fil atones as a stoon;
And both hise eyen broste out of his face
In sighte of every body in that place!
A voys was herd in general audience
And seyde, "Thou has desclaundred, giltless,
The doghter of hooly chirche in heigh presence;
Thus hastou doon, and yet holde I my pees."
Of this mervaille agast was al the prees;
As mazed folk they stoden everichone,
For drede of wreche, save Custance allone.
Greet was the drede, and eek the repentance,
Of hem that hadden wronge suspecioun
Upon this sely, innocent Custance;
And for this miracle, in conclusion,
And by Custance's mediacioun,
The Kyng, and many another in that place
Converted was—thanked be Christes grace!

Mandel Brothers Announce
New 1921 Models of

The VOCALION

At Approximately

Pre-War Prices

To those who know the Aeolian Company—who are familiar with its high standards and ideals—this announcement will be of extreme significance. To such, the possibility of securing a genuine Vocalion at a price based on values existing before the war, constitutes an opportunity of exceptional importance.

The new 1921 Models of the Vocalion reflect the last word in scientific phonograph construction. In musical quality and in appearance they meet the highest Aeolian standards.

TONE AND TONE CONTROL
The Vocalion's Two Great Features

TONE—Scientific Reproduction

The Vocalion is the most perfect instrument ever made for the scientific and exact reproduction of tone. When a violin, a 'cello or vocal record is played on the Vocalion, the musical tones are heard as originally created by voice or instruments—nothing of their distinctive character and beauty is missing.

People are frequently startled at hearing the Vocalion for the first time. They are unaccustomed to hearing different instruments and voices reproduced with such literal fidelity. This is one of the two principal reasons why the Vocalion has become, in so relatively short a time, the world's greatest phonograph, recognized as such by musicians, musical educators and critics everywhere.

To the lover of music, there is a pleasure in hearing the wistful beauty of the violin, the pallid purity of the flute, the sombre melancholy of the clarinet, the full, pealing and military tones of the trumpet and trombone and the distinctive timbre of the human voice as reproduced by the Vocalion, which is not provided by any other phonograph in existence today.

TONE CONTROL—The Graduola

All phonograph manufacturers have sought some method of controlling phonograph "tone." It is the fact, however, that until the invention of the "Graduola," no practical method capable of artistic tone control had been found.

When the Graduola is used, the Vocalion becomes a sensitive instrument for the expression of the operator's musical taste. Playing any record, vocal or instrumental, he can shade the music to suit his wishes. He can swell a fortissimo passage to the full power of the instrument. He can diminish a soft one to the most delicate whisper. In a word, he can introduce all the subtle variations of color with which any artist himself will vary his different performances of the same selection.

To do all this makes the Vocalion infinitely more interesting, more personal and more satisfying than the ordinary phonograph, and is the other reason why the Vocalion has assumed preeminence in the phonograph field.

AUTO INDUSTRY BEGINS TO CLIMB OUT OF SLUMP

Boom Will Cut Detroit's Idle Army Monday.

Detroit, Mich., Feb 19.—[Special.]—Thousands of auto workers will return to the various plants on Monday. The American Motor Body company will resume production on that day and from 1,500 to 2,000 men will be employed to fill an order from the Ford Motor company. Work will begin in all departments and the force will be gradually increased. Normally 5,000 are employed. No reduction in wages is contemplated. Old employes and residents of Detroit will be given preference.

Announcement was made today by the Fisher Body company that it would resume production Monday at three plants and will hire as many men as present themselves for work.

Kelsey Wheel Company to Resume.

The Kelsey Wheel company announced it had received an order for 1,200 sets of wheels from the Ford Motor company and would hire 400 more men March 1. A 50 per cent increase in production for March over February is planned.

At the Wilson Body company more men are being taken on every day.

Paige and Reo Resume.

Increased orders showed renewed activity in the Paige and Reo plants. At the Paige plant it was said the company would increase its production 10 per cent March 1. Another increase in number of cars turned out is planned for April.

The Hyatt Roller Bearing company's Detroit office announces that gradual additions to their plant force in Patterson, N. J., will be made until the end of the month, following resumption of business with the Ford Motor company. Twenty-five per cent production in February will increase to 75 per cent in March is the report, on account of general increase in the motor industry.

At the Ford Highland Park plant 4,000 men will be added it was announced. This will bring the total force to 14,000.

Buying Crowd at Show.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—When the lights of Kansas City's fourteenth annual motor show were switched off tonight, the turnstiles showed that 115,000 had attended the show during the week. It was a buying crowd. Dealers have tangible assurance of the beginning of that return to normalcy that everybody has been looking for.

PACKER CONTROL BILL IS SHELVED FOR THIS SESSION

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Farm organization spokesmen failed in a final attempt today to induce Representative Mondell, Republican leader of the house, to permit consideration of the meat packer control bill at the present session of congress.

Representative Mondell declared that the attention of the present congress would be centered on disposing of the appropriation bills and that the packer bill would not be taken up. He refused to request the rules committee for a special rule on the subject.

When the farm leaders threatened a filibuster against appropriation measures, in the senate as well as in the house, Mr. Mondell said he could not assume responsibility for anything that might be done in the senate.

U. S. to Sift Parachute Leap of Chicago Air Postman

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 19.—Carl R. Egge, superintendent air mail service between Chicago and the Twin Cities, today began an investigation of the burning of the twin motored De Haviland plane which fell yesterday near Mendota. Pilot C. C. Eversole of Chicago with a parachute leaped from the plane when it stalled 3,000 feet up. Frank Tower, in charge of the government station near Fort Snelling, is said to have burned the plane after salvaging valuable parts. Later he issued a statement discrediting Eversole and asserting it was not necessary for Eversole to jump.

Vandals Wreck Famous Plane of Great French 'Ace'

New York, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—"Vieux Charles," the name given by Georges Guynemer, the French war aviator, to a battle plane in which he was shot down during one of his aerial contests with the boche, was wrecked by vandals Thursday night in Orange, N. J., where it had been brought for exhibition.

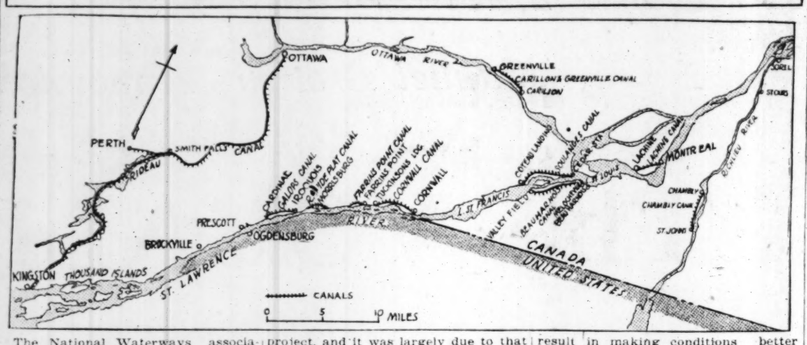
ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, SHOWING CANALS



The National Waterways association of Canada has issued a call for a deep waterway convention to be held at Toronto March 8, 9, and 10. The convention is called for the specific purpose of furthering the project for the construction of a deep waterway to the sea by way of the St. Lawrence river and the development of hydro-electric power in connection therewith, and also to discuss plans for the development of the waterways of Canada for transportation and power purposes. Addresses will be delivered by men prominent in Canada and the United States.

In calling the convention the association says:

"Through the efforts of members of the National Waterways association, the project for the construction of a deep waterway to the sea by way of the St. Lawrence river has become a matter of international interest. In January, 1914, Henry Clay, then mayor of Windsor, Ont., called a convention of Canadian lake cities to consider the project, and it was largely due to that meeting that attention was finally directed to the need for energetic work in support of the proposition. 'Every lake port a seaport' was the slogan adopted at that convention, and it is the slogan of the National Waterways association.

"The St. Lawrence river is the greatest national asset in the possession of Canada, and should be utilized for the benefit of the people in the movement of export and import trade. A deep waterway to the sea is an economic necessity and will result in a tremendous saving in transportation tolls to the people. The progress and development of the country has been retarded because of the inability of the railways to take care of the rapidly increasing commerce of the country.

"The construction of a deep waterway to the sea will provide facilities for the movement of traffic that will be of inestimable value to Canada. The increased volume of production obtained, because of the ability to market the produce of the country, will result in making conditions better throughout the dominion.

"The National Waterways association is working in harmony with the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tide-Water association and the national rivers and harbors congress of the United States in urging the development of the waterways for the carriage of traffic.

"The development of hydro-electric energy made possible by the deepening of the St. Lawrence river will be of material assistance to the manufacturers of Ontario, and will pay interest on the entire cost of construction of the deep waterway. The industrial life of the country depends on increased transportation facilities, and we confidently ask your assistance in our efforts to make 'every lake port a seaport.'

"At the daily sessions every opportunity will be given for the discussion of, and decisions regarding, the matters under consideration. It is up to us to decide what we want and then use every legitimate effort to secure it."

CHARGES ORDER TO "BEAT UP" STRIKE LEADERS

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 19.—[United Press.]—Charges that Conrad W. Austin, chief law enforcement officer of Alabama, ordered his deputies to "beat hell" out of the United Mine Workers' leaders in the Alabama coal strike zone, and an effort was made to "cover up" the murder of William Baird, union miner, for whose death nine state militiamen were indicted, were made today in a signed statement by Sid Cowan, who recently resigned as one of Austin's force.

Cowan also charged that expenses of law enforcement officers patrolling the strike zone were paid by other parties than the state of Alabama and that a conspiracy existed in advance to beat up Phil Painter, editor of a labor paper. Painter was attacked on the streets of Birmingham a month ago by two deputies.

Colby Orders Inquiry Into Mexican Oil Squeeze

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Action of President Obregon in secretly ordering the Mexican department of commerce, industry, and labor to forbid the issuance of drilling permits except in lands which have been manifested, an action striking particularly at American oil companies operating in Mexico, caused surprise at the state department and the embassy at Mexico was instructed today to make inquiries and to report.

DO IT NOW! LESS THAN MONTH LEFT TO PAY INCOME TAX

Wake up, income taxpayers, the filing period has only a little more than three weeks to run. All returns must be in on or before March 15. Uncle Sam gives the taxpayer two and one-half months in which to file his returns.

You must file within that time or else pay a penalty for neglect to do so. THE TRIBUNE income tax bureau has been assisting hundreds of taxpayers every day.

For failure to make a return on time the penalty is a fine of not more than $1,000. An additional assessment of 25 per cent of the amount may be applied unless a later return is filed and it is satisfactorily shown that the delinquency was due to a reasonable cause. "Willful refusal" to make a return and pay the tax on time is punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or one year's imprisonment, or both, together with the cost of the prosecution.

Where, by reason of illness or absense, additional time is required for the filing of the return, the collector of internal revenue may grant an extension not to exceed thirty days upon written application therefor, made on or before March 15.

If, before the end of the thirty days' extension, an accurate return cannot be filed, appeal for further time must be made to the commissioner of Internal revenue with a full recital of the causes of the delay.

NEAR BEER CAUSE OF NEAR MUTINY ON ITALIAN SHIP

New York, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—From somewhere in the Atlantic a wireless message came today to Phelps Bros., agents for the Vindobona, a freighter flying the inter-allied flag. It expressed the sentiments of the vessel's Italian crew after two days' acquaintance with near-beer put aboard after Phelps Bros. had been unable to supply the usual wine ration for crews of Mediterranean sailors. In effect it ran:

"Never again! We pledge ourselves never to return to America while its laws against good wine remain in force. We pledge ourselves to see that no crew ever brings the Vindobona back to meet with the horrors we have met. We pledge ourselves to see to it that the Seamen's federation of Italy refuses to put a crew aboard any ship on which you allow the men to suffer from thirst and this slop with which you have swindled us. Never again!"

Vassar Enrolls Its 500 Pupils for Year of 1925

New York, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—Vassar college has closed its registration list of September, 1925, four years and seven months in advance of entrance. This means that 500 students have already applied for entrance at that time, and because of the limited enrollment of the college, no more names can be considered for that year on the regular enrollment lists.

BOSTON FIGHTING ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PLAN

Boston, Mass., Feb. 19.—Opposition to the great lakes-St. Lawrence river tidewater project by the New England Traffic league was urged in a report of a special committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce today. The committee expressed the opinion that the proposed improvement of the waterway "would more likely accrue to the benefit of the dominion of Canada rather than to the section of the country which is so energetically pushing it."

More than one-half of the taxation which would be levied in the United States for the cost of the waterway, which is estimated at from $100,000,000 to $500,000,000, the report said, would fall upon New England, New York, and Pennsylvania, while the return would be slight in comparison.

Owing to a liberal proportion of pigs and light hogs among the offerings yesterday this class of stock sold 10@15c lower, while the heavier averages held steady. The price range at the close was much narrower than a week ago, the day's top at $9.75 being 35c below the previous Saturday, while the average at $9.00 stood 15c lower for the week.

With yesterday's supply of hogs estimated at 10,000, the total for the week was 199,000, the smallest since the first week of January. The run was 5,500 smaller than the previous week, but 21,400 larger than a year ago and 15,000 larger than the ten year average for the corresponding week.

Weight of Hogs Decreasing.

The estimated average weight of hogs at 228 pounds was four pounds lighter than the previous week, when the average was the heaviest since October. Last week's figure was six pounds lighter than a year ago, but five pounds heavier than the ten year average.

The week's top for hogs reached $10.35, falling short of the year's high sale by 10c and surpassing the previous week by 15c. The top was $5.20 lower than the same week last year and $7.65 lower than two year's ago.

The week's average price at $9.25 showed 20c gain over the previous week, but $5.05 decline from a year ago and $1.45 decline from the average for the last ten years.

Cattle Prices Higher.

There has been a steady upturn in cattle prices during the last two weeks, due entirely to smaller supplies. The general average price of good beef cattle for the week at $8.35 stood 65c above two weeks ago, with yearlings averaging less than 1,000 lbs topping the market at $10.50.

Closing sheep and lamb prices were the highest of the week, with Colorado fed lambs yesterday on shipping account at $9.75, or $1.25 above the low point of the week. Receipts of sheep and lambs for the week at 96,100 were largest for February in seven years. Smaller supplies, however, are needed for the good of the trade.

Receipts at Chicago for Monday are estimated at 13,000 cattle, 52,000 hogs, and 20,000 sheep, against 19,983 cattle, 44,947 hogs, and 21,190 sheep the corresponding Monday a year ago. Next week's estimated receipts are 49,000 cattle, 180,000 hogs, and 80,000 sheep. A year ago next week 144,824 hogs arrived, while two years ago receipts were 243,-[illegible].

Some Investors Sell Liberty Bonds.

Letters received by this department recently indicate that samll investors living in several different states have evolved the same idea at about the same time. Such coincidences or thought waves, or whatever you choose to call them, seem to be common in market movements.

This idea is that investors might do well to sell part of their Liberty bonds and put the proceeds in some of the various high yield issues now coming out. They are not proposing to take the profit on Liberty bonds bought last year at low prices, but to sell bonds they bought at par when they were "buying till it hurt," and, in the phrase of the street, to "take their loss."

Probably the true explanation of the recent heaviness of the market for Liberty bonds is found in this selling. When the market advanced a short time previously and the yield declined to a point well below 6 per cent holders began to look longingly at the high yields of new issues, and some of them sold out on a basis of 5½ per cent, more or less, to buy new bonds yielding 7½ or 8.

Whether this exchange was a wise move depends principally on the circumstances and aims of the investor. The great advantages of the Liberty bonds are their partial or complete exemption from taxes and their safety. The amount of tax that must be paid on the new issues varies with the circumstances of the person buying them.

Whatever the result for the investor, there can be only one result for the market. It will tend to make the rise of Liberty bonds slow. As long as the demand for capital is urgent enough to float 8 per cent bonds the 4½ per cent issues will have to stay in their own place, which is far below the top.

Pettibone-Mulliken.

A. W. J.—The Pettibone-Mulliken company is engaged in the railway supply business and, like all other concerns in that line, is subject to extreme fluctuations of earnings. Last year it earned $890,000. This covered dividends on preferred stock and left $332,666. This amounts to 4¾ per cent on common stock. In 1919, 1 per cent was earned on common. Dividends on preferred have been paid regularly, but nothing on common, which is a speculation, rather than an investment. We cannot predict the course of the market.

COTTON MARKETS

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Cotton prices declined and closed with losses of 10 to 18 points, despite the reports of cold weather in the south. Effect of the latter was offset by a lessened demand from the mills and for manufactured goods, which led to active selling. Expectations are for god deliveries on March contract next Wednesday. New crop months were stronger than the nearby. Prices follow:

Resident Bond Salesmen WANTED

Good bonds have become the universally accepted form of safe investment, because they combine the three dominant factors of Safety, Yield and Marketability. The Liberty Loans created over 17,000,000 bondholders; there were only 400,000 prior to the war. The result has been an unprecedented demand for sound bonds.

An old-established Chicago bond house (dealing only in high grade Investment Bonds) has a plan whereby every city of 5,000 or over can have a local bond representative.

We are seeking more resident salesmen (one for each city), who can furnish the best of references, who know their communities, and who want to establish themselves in the bond business. We prefer (although we do not require) men with banking, investment or real estate mortgage experience.

To such men we offer a real opportunity, with earnings commensurate with their ability, and unlimited support and co-operation, including advertising, direct by mail follow-up, partial payment plan and the personal aid of our Sales Manager.

EXPORTERS BUY WHEAT AND CORN; PRICES ADVANCE

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

A better class of buying in all grains absorbed the offerings, which came mainly from local operators on the weak spots, and made a good advance and strong close at around the best prices of the day. Renewal of export buying in wheat was a striking feature. At the finish wheat showed gains of 2¾c to 2⅞c, corn 1c to 1⅜c, oats ⅝c to 1c, rye 2½c to 2¾c, and barley 1c for the day.

In the face of a light outside trade and a bearish feeling among grain traders in the last few days, wheat prices show gains of 5@6c over those of a week ago. Corn is up 1¼@2¾c; oats, ⅛@1½c, rye, 4¼@5c, and barley, 4¾c. In provisions changes were the smallest in a long time, pork being 20c higher, lard 2½c lower, and short ribs 35c lower.

Exporters After Wheat.

Exporters were in the market for wheat and corn on a liberal scale. Their purchases at seaboard were reported at 1,000,000 bu wheat, said to be in anticipation of an order from Greece that is expected to be filled Monday. March wheat was bought freely here by houses with New York connections, and trades were given in exchange for the cash wheat at the gulf and at New York.

Apprehension of damage to the winter wheat crop from cold weather had more effect as a strengthening factor. The cold is expected to check operations of the green bugs in the southwest, and as a factor the latter were sidetracked for the time being.

The advance of 3½c on March to $1.70¾ and to $1.69½ for May were made mainly on the reports of the big export business. Argentine was said to be lighter and wheat from that country was said to be arriving in England in poor condition.

Light pressure, combined with the advance in wheat, gave corn a stronger tone, and prices advanced 1⅜c, despite early opposition by locals, who assisted the late advance by covering.

Oats had good support all day, while selling was scattered and local. Prices moved up 1¼c and closed at the top at 45⅝@45⅞c on May. Stocks are to decrease for the week.

Rye was bought on New York orders, July being picked up freely. There were orders to buy July rye and sell May wheat, as for several days, but the business was light. Barley was firm to 1c higher.

Provision Range Narrows.

Provisions had a narrow range, with selling by commission houses on outside orders. Cash trade was quiet. At the close pork lost 20c, lard 12½@22½c, and short ribs 10c for the day. Shipments of lard and meats for the week were slightly in excess of last year, being 37,069,000 lbs. Packing here since Nov. 1 aggregates 2,602,000 hogs, a decrease of 429,000 from last year. Prices follow:

WHEAT RECEIPTS GOOD; CORN EXCEEDS LAST YEAR

Movement of grain in the west decreased slightly last week, although there are indications of a larger marketing of wheat in the southwest and northwest, and of corn in Illinois, Indiana, parts of Iowa and the northwest. There is a surplus of box cars in all sections, and of 358,055 cars of all kinds, as officially reported.

Grain receipts at Chicago last week were 4,055,000 bu, or almost 100,000 bu less than the previous week, and 400,000 bu short of last year, and almost 400,000 below the average.

Primary receipts of corn were 5,550,000 bu, a drop of 500,000 bu for the week, and 486,000 bu from last year. Wheat arrivals of 5,546,000 bu were the largest at this time in over five years, increasing 347,000 bu for the week and 1,852,000 bu over last year. In oats there was a gain of 139,000 bu for the week, and a loss of 1,803,000 bu from last year, the aggregate being 2,867,000 bu. Shipments of grain from Chicago last week were 3,000,000 bu, or 1,290,000 bu more than the previous week, and 612,000 bu greater than last year.

HAY TRADE GOOD

Timothy hay sold well on Saturday with only 11 cars in. Country loadings were light, about two days' supply. Receipts of alfalfa were 5 cars and sales slow. Arrivals of prairie were only one car Nebraska and 6 cars South Dakota. Choice met a fair sale with poor stuff slow. Straw sold readily, with one car each of rye, wheat, and oats received. Prices follow:

CASH·GRAIN NEWS

Exporters at the seaboard were credited with buying 800,000 bu cash wheat in all positions, presumably anticipating the placing of the Greek order for 1,300,000 bu which is expected to be announced Monday. There was 500,000 bu corn sold for export at the seaboard, and local handlers sold 400,000 bu to go east.

Domestic shipping sales were 5,000 bu wheat, 27,000 bu corn, 26,000 bu oats, and 3,000 bu barley.

Premiums on soft red winter wheat at Chicago dropped 6c as compared with March, selling at 25c over for No. 1 and 20c over for No. 2 red. Hard winter was off about 2c. Receipts, 19 cars. Outside markets were unchanged to 3c lower, except at Omaha, which was unchanged to 1c higher.

Demand for cash corn was less active than of late, due to prospects of larger offerings Monday, and the basis widened out slightly as compared with the May at the last. Sample values were practically unchanged as compared with Friday. Receipts, 230 cars. Outside markets were unchanged to 1c lower.

Offerings of oats were moderate and sold readily, with prices generally unchanged. No. 2 white, ¼@½c over May. Receipts, 59 cars.

WORLD'S·GRAIN MARKET·NEWS

A better tone was noticeable in the grain markets, especially in wheat, as a result of the advance and of a renewal of export buying. It seems strange to the trade to have foreigners come into the market, and while some of the business is regarded as closing of old trades it had its effect just the same. The wheat taken will cut into the supply, and tends to create more confidence among holders. The way the March wheat was taken by commission houses on export orders offset all news of a bearish character.

Those friendly to the buying side of corn say there has been little or no hedging pressure for several days, and they believe May corn below 70c is not a safe sale. Discounts have hardened 3@4c within a week, although they weakened at the last, which is frequently the case on Saturday.

"Hedging sales of provisions are not as pronounced as during the previous week," says W. L. Gregson. "The general trade sentiment favors lower priced hogs pending further trade developments with Europe, but it is assumed open trading with England and the needs of other countries will soon be such that a much better demand will set in. Retail prices in the domestic markets are nearer in line than formerly, and stocks of all kinds of lard and other products are seasonably normal."

Indian shipments of wheat were 750,000 bu to the United Kingdom, making 4,300,000 bu cleared from Australia and India.

"Apprehension over possible insect damage to winter wheat has been dissipated for the time being by more favorable weather conditions," say Charles Sincere & Co. "This will give more prominence to the statistical position."

Central Leather Deficit for Year at $25,751,665

The disastrous results which the 1920 price slump brought to the leather industry are further emphasized by the annual report of the Central Leather company, whose chief output is sole leather. The report shows an operating loss of $22,428,214, compared with net profit of $14,288,481, or $30.18 a share on the common stock after preferred dividends in 1919. After dividend payments the year's total deficit was $25,751,666.

This deficit, the largest reported so far by any of the big leather companies, wiped out practically all the company's accummulated war profits. It reduced the profit and loss surplus from $30,509,274 on Dec. 31, 1919, to $4,757,608 on Dec. 31, 1920, which is the smallest since Dec. 31, 1911. Meantime, however, the company had used $8,000,000 of its surplus to write down the book value of its property account.

The income account, with comparison, follows:

	1920.	1919.
Loss on operations	$13,647,096	.....
Gen. exp. and chgs.	7,748,194	.....
Deficit	21,075,290	*$15,748,837

ROADS' DECEMBER NET INCOME 1.1% ON INVESTMENT

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—The railroads of the United States for the month of December, 1920, received only $15,896,313 as their net operating income. On a 6 per cent basis on the valuation of their property, they should have received $86,858,000. In other words, they received only 1.1 per cent on the total valuation of capital tied up in properties. These figures are based upon returns made today to the bureau of railway economics.

The figures show total operating revenues for December, 1920, were $544,650,847, compared with $448,033,209 for the corresponding month in 1919. Operating expenses were $493,580,921, as against $410,332,976.

Despite the fact that from September, 1920, to the close of the year approximately 300,000 railroad employés throughout the country were laid off, the operating expenses of the carriers have been such that it has been impossible to make any substantial showing in the way of revenues.

FINANCIAL NOTES

A shipment of $1,200,000 in foreign gold arrived yesterday and a consignment of $6,075,000 has been shipped from London to Kuhn, Loeb & Co., making a total of $108,000,000 for the present movement. London reports $463,704 of gold were exported to the United States during the week ended Feb. 16.

The Southeastern Express company, which will handle the express business of the Southern Railway, is offering 10,000 shares of stock at $100 a share. Subscriptions are limited to lots of 100 shares. The company's receipts for the first year are estimated at $9,700,000, and net, after operating expenses and taxes, at $560,000.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago reports the weekly movement of credits as follows: Debits to individual deposit account reported for the week ending Feb 16, by 195 banks in twenty-two leading clearing house cities in the seventh federal reserve district, aggregate $886,507,000, compared with $875,740,000 a week ago. Aggregate debits to individual deposit account amounted to $886,507,000 compared with $1,106,654,000 for the corresponding week last year.

CORPORATION EARNINGS

STANDARD OIL OF KENTUCKY.

The company reports net earnings for 1920 of $3,770,260, equal to $62.83 a share on the stock, as compared with $2,256,033, or $37.10 a share, in 1919. Net earnings show an increase of $1,544,227, or approximately 70 per cent over 1919. Total net profits were $6,020,260, against $3,726,033 in 1919, an increase of $2,294,227, or 74 per cent.

SAVAGE ARMS.

Earnings for the last year equal to $1.35 a share on the stock, against $19.28 a share in 1919. Surplus after charges and all taxes last year amounted to $117,769, against $1,512,424 in 1919. After allowing for dividends paid, the company reported a deficit for the twelve months of $631,623, compared with a surplus the previous year of $643,504.

This new office building (50 ft.x80 ft.) is a part of the plant. Modern, well-lighted and ventilated, and equipped with high grade furniture.

THIS BIG MODERN PLANT FOR SALE

Formerly an up-to-date brewery can be converted with small expense to house some large manufacturing concern.

Sale price considerably less than actual value.

Equipment: Buildings (one to six stories) containing approximately 140,000 square feet floor area, of steel, brick and concrete construction, and (about ten acres), trackage for about forty cars, machinery, including four 250 H. P. boilers and two refrigerating machines, and office building shown in insert.

Location: Ideal for any kind of manufactory. Very best in Omaha, the logical distributing point for the central west. Omaha is recognized as being the greatest agricultural city in the world. This city leads in many industries. It is the fourth railroad center.

Write for Facts: On account of limited space we can give here only an outline of the excellent buildings, equipment and location comprised in this modern manufacturing plant. Here is an exceptional opportunity. We will gladly mail further details, blue prints and photographs to interested parties. Write or wire.

Buy Public Utilities

Seasoned Public Utilities have passed through the most trying period of their history. Today, holding the strongest position both legally and strategically they have known, they are more favored than ever before. Public confidence is manifested in two ways:

(1) There are approximately 4,000,000 public utility security holders—twice the number prior to the war.

(2) Rising daily market reports indicate an increasing confidence.

Since the war the demand for electric power has increased 75%, which, together with rate advances throughout the country, points to increased earnings. The present existing unsupplied demand for electricity alone cannot be met within five years. And the demand is constantly increasing. These factors materially increase the safety of public utility securities.

For these reasons, well secured obligations of strong power and light companies, serving large populations, are considered among the strongest of securities.

Our new circular T 104 describes a diversified list of attractive public utility issues, which we recommend for conservative investment. Send for your copy.

RESERVE BANKS RETURNING TO PRE-WAR SHAPE

BY O. A. MATHER.

Unmistakable evidence that the country's banking system has passed its period of greatest strain and is rapidly approaching a condition which will capably meet any demands made upon it is contained in the weekly statements of the federal reserve banks. The system as a whole shows a further sizeable decline in loans, which now total for the first time since the United States went to war, about the same as a year before. They now are nearly a half billion dollars below the peak, reached early in November.

Thus the average reserve ratio has risen to the highest mark since Sept. 26, 1919. Federal reserve note circulation again declined and now stands over a half billion dollars below the high mark reached late in December, although still remaining somewhat higher than a year ago. Taken as a whole, the statements show continued and orderly liquidation toward a more sound basis for business and industry.

Borrowings Decline Sharply.

The consolidated statement of the twelve federal reserve banks shows a further contraction in loans of $41,108,000, those on government obligations and those on commercial paper declining $21,495,000 and $19,613,000, respectively. Bills purchased in the market receded $9,000,000, so that total bills on hand declined $50,108,000. Total earning assets receded $51,923,000. The member banks reduced their reserve account $19,404,000. Gross deposits expanded $48,648,000, including an increase in government deposits of $13,659,000. Federal reserve note circulation declined $12,972,000. Gold reserves and total reserves expanded $10,674,000 and $10,792,000, respectively.

The ratio of total reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined rose to 50.3 from 49.6 per cent in the preceding week, while the ratio of gold reserves to note circulation, after setting aside 35 per cent against net deposits, rose to 58.5 from 57.6 per cent.

New York Reserve Rises.

The statement of the New York federal reserve bank showed a decline in loans of $41,674,127, those on government obligations and those on commercial paper receding $19,120,943 and $25,-553,184, respectively. Bills bought increased $3,708,051, so that total bills on hand declined $40,966,075. Total earning assets receded $42,766,075. Gold reserves and total reserves expanded $25,-499,323 and $25,627,593, respectively. Gross deposits increased $4,190,822. Federal reserve note circulation increased $4,052,950.

The ratio of total reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined rose to 41.7 from 39.4 per cent in the preceding week.

Chicago Has a Setback.

The statement of the Chicago federal reserve bank shows a decline in gold reserves of $11,036,084, primarily the result of a loss of $8,490,000 through the gold settlement fund. Total reserves declined $11,940,127. Loans expanded $5,567,731, those on government obligations and those on commercial paper increasing $4,445,093 and $1,062,638, respectively. Bills purchased declined $1,638,055, so that total bills on hand increased $3,869,-646. Total earning assets expanded $4,-115,146. The member banks reduced their reserve account $8,591,366. Gross deposits increased $3,867,312, which was entirely the result of an increase of government deposits of $3,882,875. Federal reserve note circulation receded $2,108,-015.

The ratio of total reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined fell to 51.9 from 53 per cent in the preceding week.

Excess Reserve Falls.

The weekly statement of the New York clearing house banks makes an indifferent showing. Excess reserve, which had increased in the preceding week, again sagged back, declining by $7,625,-180 to $11,722,370. This decrease was primarily the result of a decline of $8,207,000 in the member banks' reserve account at the federal reserve bank. Aggregate reserve receded $8,024,000. Loans declined $20,216,000, and cash in vaults receded $10,479,000. Demand deposits remained about stationary, but time deposits declined $11,726,000. Government deposits increased $28,883,000. The figures follow:

ATLANTIC GULF INVESTORS MOVE TO ASK RECEIVER

More than sixty stockholders of the Atlantic, Gulf and West Indies Steamship Lines, a $40,000,000 corporation, met in Chicago yesterday, organized a stockholders' protective committee, and authorized legal proceedings looking to a receivership and accounting. This action on the part of middle west stockholders resulted from the recent sharp drop in the price of the common stock.

"Sixty-eight stockholders, holding more than 20,000 shares, attended the meeting," said Robert Deerfield of Fond du Lac, Wis., who was appointed chairman. "We have instructed eastern attorneys to file a suit asking a receiver in the federal court in Dover, Del., where the company is incorporated. We will charge that the company has been mismanaged and its assets dissipated, and that a receiver is necessary to conserve the stockholders' interests."

Another meeting of minority stockholders and the committee will be held at the Palmer house in Chicago tomorrow afternoon and further plans for litigation will be taken up.

·CHICAGO·STOCK·TRANSACTIONS·

Chicago stocks were fairly active in the week end session yesterday and prices generally were lower. Union Carbide was an exception, making a net gain of a point, but with the bulk of trading at a larger advance. There was considerable short covering as the result of the regular quarterly dividend being declared. Libby again was under selling pressure and declined fractionally. Both the packing house and motor shares were weak. Sears-Roebuck scrip declined to 93½ and the stock was fractionally lower. A block of $10,000 Chicago Railways first mortgage 5 per cent bonds sold at an advance of 2 points.

CHICAGO BANK CLEARINGS

Chicago bank clearings for last week totaled $580,486,921, an increase of $180,-672,104 over the preceding week, which contained a holiday, but a decrease of $70,575,-182 from the corresponding week in 1920. A JOB FOR SOMEBODY

Unless your plant is operating on a very satisfactory basis, somebody is now trying to figure out how to do better with it. Somebody is turning over a lot of plans in his mind, with a view of cutting production costs without making capital expenditures.

Probably this individual is close to your manufacturing problems, and has been on the payroll for years. This is an advantage and a disadvantage at the same time, because while he can see many things that ought to be done, the obvious is apt to escape him.

The benefit of our engineering co-operation in such matters is great. We bring in a fresh viewpoint and look to the present, instead of into the past, for results. Our practical experience in many manufacturing plants also widens our vision.

We don't want such a job in your plant unless we can help you, so there is no hazard in asking us to talk it over with you. Why not do so?

You can take 30 months to pay for a Lyon & Healy piano!

Small Payments and Price Reductions

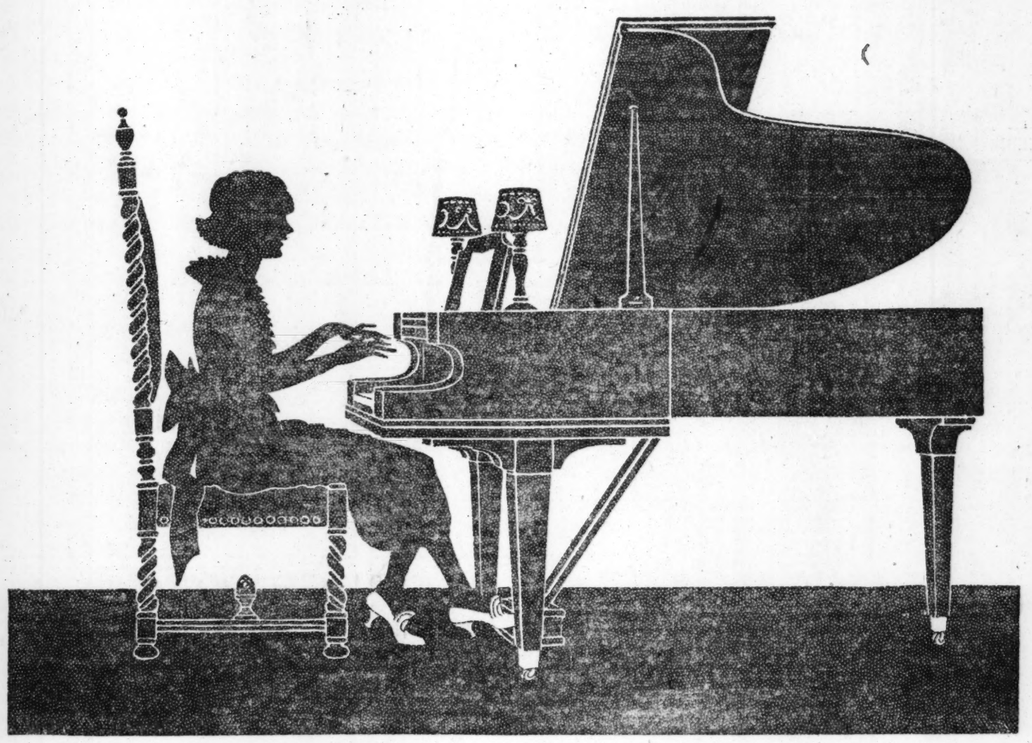
Those who have been waiting for lower prices find reassurance in our action in reducing prices on all pianos of our manufacture. The opportunity for making an advantageous purchase is marked.

Furthermore, exchanges enable us to give piano buyers most unusual values in used pianos. There is here a piano for every taste and circumstance.

Our convenient arrangement for payment makes ownership an easy matter. No reasonable expectations will be disappointed. On any type instrument which you select you may make a small payment. The remainder may be paid in low monthly installments. A liberal allowance is given on old pianos taken in exchange.

Modernized Pianos

In the column to the right you will find listed a number of used pianos that have been brought up-to-date in every respect. The musical quality leaves little to be desired, for many of these instruments are old only in years. Perhaps they were played upon only a few hours a month. But the case designs were old style and these have been changed to accord with the present popular models.



Steinway Pianos

We are fortunate in being able to display the latest types of this supreme instrument. Recent shipments of both Upright and Grand models enable us to offer again a complete showing. Three salons are devoted exclusively to them.

Pianola Pianos

Our new salesrooms on our fourth floor also emphasize the remarkable character of our offerings. Here are shown the various styles of the popular Pianola and the Aeolian Player Piano. Prices on many of these have been reduced radically and they are most attractive values.

The Lyon & Healy Apartment Grand Piano

Here is an instrument that represents the flower of two hundred years of piano evolution. Every other form of the piano, at best, has left something to be desired. This combines every desirable quality, omits none, and adds a number of new features.

That the Grand Piano excels in artistic beauty and musical quality is a fact too well understood to need emphasis.

But the usual size of the Grand Piano has made it prohibitive in the available space of modern homes; the price has been considerably greater than the great majority of music-loving homes could afford; and the tones, adapted particularly to the concert hall, have been too loud for smaller rooms.

In the Lyon & Healy Apartment Grand Piano these three objections to the Grand have been eliminated. The size is reduced to a much smaller space, without in the least detracting from the beauty of the piano as one of the pieces of furniture in a room. The price has been brought within reach of all who can afford a first-class Upright piano. And the tones are adjusted to the acoustics of the modern apartment home.

The tremendous demand for Lyon & Healy Apartment Grand Pianos—exceeding our best expectations—is the seal of public approval upon this logical finality in piano building for present-day use.

A most interesting display of these delightful instruments may be seen on our third floor. Here the various styles may be compared with a view to solving your own problem. There is a choice of woods, including the new lustrous brown mahogany. Be sure to come and inspect them. The recent reductions in price emphasize strikingly that this piano is the one for your home.

NEXT TUESDAY IS HIS BIRTHDAY—George Washington, first president of the United States, was born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, Feb. 22, 1732. He died Dec. 14, 1799, and a few days later Col. Henry Lee, father of Gen. Robert E. Lee, delivered a memorial address which contained the most famous eulogy in American history—"First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

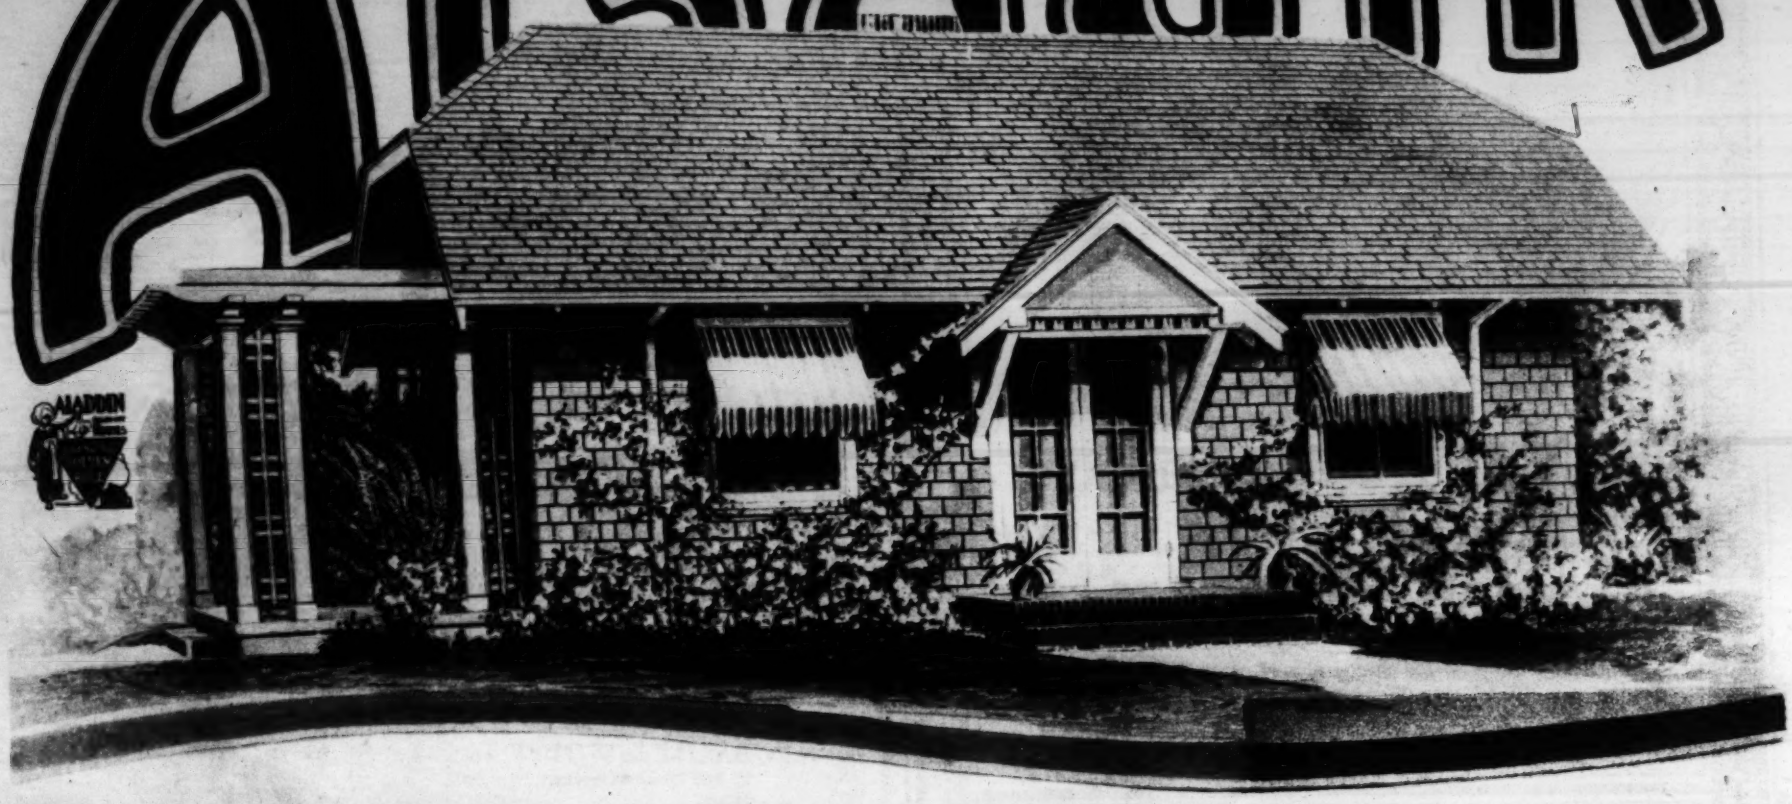
Aladdin



Cut Building Cost $500

Mr. J. E. Remick Did It—So Can You

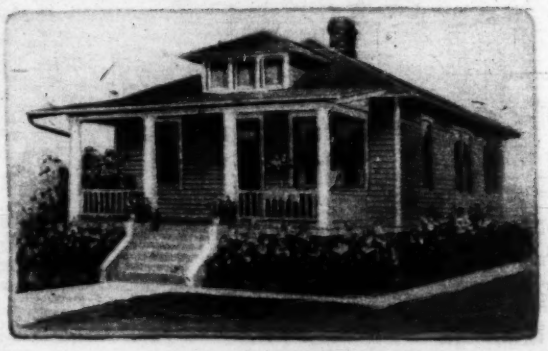
That is a very handsome sum to save in the building of a beautiful home—exactly as it was represented, completely finished in every detail and JUST AS THE FAMILY WANTED IT. Mr. Remick had cause to be perfectly satisfied in every way, and it is no wonder that his frank letter shows his grateful appreciation. Read it, it is interesting:

J. E. Remick, Main Street, Kittery, Maine, writes: "I'm greatly pleased with my Aladdin Home. We have a fine house, and I know that I saved $500 by buying it of the Aladdin Company. The material was of the best, clear and free from knots, and plenty of it. I had some left over—everything fitted fine.

"I have worked at building houses ever since 1868 and have worked on a great many of them, and I will say that my house is much better than I expected to get. We like our home and have had many people here to see it. They all seem to like it and say they would like one just like it.

"I can assure you we are perfectly satisfied with our Aladdin and very glad to recommend your Company to any one. If I should build another house I would get one of the Aladdin houses."

This letter is no exception. There are actually THOUSANDS of others expressing the same satisfaction in different words. They have come from Aladdin Home owners from one end of the United States to the other; from every state and pretty nearly every county and township. Those letters are A TREMENDOUS ENDORSEMENT; they mean more to you perhaps than our own words do, yet they merely PROVE that our every statement, representation and guaranty was positively truthful and fully borne out in their own experience, just the same as YOURS would be.



Aladdin's Perfect System of Distribution Saves Much Time and Covers the Entire United States

Naturally our four great mills are located in the heart of the largest, high-quality timber-producing sections—in Michigan, Mississippi, North Carolina and Oregon. Scattered across the entire country, there is no freight delivery point that cannot be easily reached by shipments of Aladdin Homes over the shortest route and in the quickest possible time. From one day to one week in time is saved in this manner, and freight charges are proportionately very much reduced. There are no delays, no piece-meal shipments—everything from top to bottom, a complete Aladdin Home, ready to be easily and quickly assembled, is sent in one shipment—in a sealed car—and, further, it is done promptly upon receipt of order. Your Aladdin Home is waiting for you right now.

"DOLLAR-A-KNOT" QUALITY MEANS PERFECTION

There can be nothing better than perfection. Knots in lumber mean imperfect lumber; Aladdin Homes are not made of that kind. Nothing but the best—the cleanest, clearest, knotless siding and outside finish is used in all homes. Pretentious house or cottage—it makes no difference—the lumber is identically the same—the finest that grows in the forests of the land. Our "Dollar-a-Knot Guarantee" that has stood for years still holds good. Send coupon for copy of book, "Aladdin Homes" No. 857.

Aladdin Gets 20 Feet of Lumber from a 16 Foot Board

The Aladdin book explains exactly how this is accomplished. Long before the war taught its lessons of elimination of waste in material and labor, the Aladdin Company had, through its wonderful organization and its corps of experts in every branch of home construction, employed every means of economical and scientific designing and construction to the end that the Aladdin Home Builder would not have to pay for a single foot of waste material.

$100 Worth of Material for $82 $100 Worth of Labor for $70

Surely this saving is worth while. It means that you can have the ideal home of your dreams at less cost by the Aladdin System. You will have a better built home, for every piece of material you receive from us is of the highest possible grade. The highest quality and the most expertly prepared lumber it is possible to make is included in every Aladdin Home. Send for book, "Aladdin Homes" No. 857.

Watch Pyorrhea Go

With War's Wonder Antiseptic

Gum soreness and bleeding usually end in one week. Destroys germ cause promptly. Free trial proves it.

Nothing like Kloria has ever been known before for sore, bleeding gums, pyorrhea, etc. Usually within one week all gum soreness and bleeding disappear and soon the shrunken gums tighten around the teeth again. Anyone can easily apply it, and the results are really amazing. Doubt it, if you must, but try it.

This is the same wonderful new antiseptic agent which healed war wounds often in one-fourth the usual time, and conquered germ infection where all old-standard antiseptics had failed.

Never before was there an antiseptic so healing, so effective in destroying germs, and with so many uses in every home.

Kloria doesn't irritate, is soothing, pleasant, and absolutely safe, because not poisonous. Yet by scientific test, it is over 40 times more germ-destroying than carbolic acid.

Apply it without fear to any skin disease, such as eczema or barber's itch, and notice how quickly the trouble fades away. Mark how it soothes soreness, irritation and itching. Note how promptly it destroys the pus infection of boils, carbuncles and sores; how it heals cuts and burns more rapidly than was ever known before. For dandruff, simply wet the scalp with Kloria and watch the scalp itching disappear in a few applications, yet it is harmless as water to the hair. Try it for mouth-wash and gargle—see how quickly it relieves sore throat—how clean the mouth feels. Harmless, yet far more effective than poisonous antiseptics for personal hygiene.

Dissolve a few Kloria Tablets in water and instantly you have, at a cost of a few cents, a large bottle of liquid antiseptic which is clean, colorless, stainless and virtually odorless.

All druggists, 50c. Money refunded if not satisfied.

AMERICA'S BEST GUNNERS—Here is the champion gun crew No. 5 of the U. S. S. Arkansas, which, during the recent Pacific fleet maneuvers, held the record in the United States navy for five inch guns. At annual target practice these boys fired four shots and made four direct hits in twenty-one seconds on a moving ten foot target at a range of 1,850 yards. Naval officers say that no other gunners of any nation have ever equaled this exploit.

"Those Corsets really make you look twenty pounds lighter!"

That's the comment everybody makes to wearers of "Stylish Stout" Corsets. For every style takes years from one's figure; from three to five inches off one's measurements; and gives an appearance of twenty pounds lighter weight!

And it achieves these amazing accomplishments with perfect comfort! The deep, elastic gores preserve slim lines when standing, yet are pliant when one is seated; the cleverly placed bones are wide spaced to add to the comfort of these Corsets.

"Stylish Stout" Brassieres are designed on the same original, slenderizing principle.

For sale at all good stores, everywhere.

Can You Create a Photoplay?

Do You Really Want to Know?

THE Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing now introduces for the first time in the history of education by correspondence, a new method of discovering in men and women who may least suspect it, the presence of Creative Imagination —that fundamental qualification which is the photo-playwright's "key to success."

If you have it in you, you should develop it.

If you lack it, you should give up the idea of ever writing photoplays, for creative imagination is inborn and cannot be acquired.

This simple test comes to you in the form of a confidential questionnaire prepared especially for us after months of study by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, former instructor in short story writing at Northwestern University and University of Minnesota, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, America's most prolific photoplay writer, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," "The Great Redeemer," et cetera.

You simply send for it and try it in the privacy of your home and without expense.

TO those who answer it successfully, will be offered an opportunity to obtain competent training in photoplay authorship through the Department of Education of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

We will tell you frankly if you have or if you lack the essentials—for this institution serves the great producers, who buy photoplays, as well as those who wish to learn the art of writing them; and, therefore, must seek only those who are fitted for success.

Perhaps you have ability and do not know it—this test will tell. Maybe you believe you have ability but have not—you want to know. For you don't want to try to learn and we don't want to try to teach you if you lack the main essentials to success. This school maintains the standards of a university because that is "good business" as well as ethics, and we are jealous of our reputation in this field.

Granting that you have ability, a real opportunity is open to you in the writing of scenarios.

The motion picture industry is seeking everywhere and earnestly for new writers and you need not have "made a name." Several thousand new plays are needed every year and the present writers cannot fill the great demand.

If you have acceptable ideas and will learn to put them into the form that producers require in a scenario before they will even read the play, you will have an ample market for your work. The Palmer Plan teaches that form; but only to those who have creative imagination.

The course requires home study during spare time only. Literary ability is not a factor, for hardly a word of what you write appears upon the screen

Behind this course, on the Advisory Council, stand such leaders in the motion picture industry as Cecil B. DeMille, director general Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Thos. H. Ince, head of the Ince Studios; Rob Wagner, writer for the Saturday Evening Post; and Lois Weber, foremost director among women.

If you think, therefore, that you would like to seriously test your fitness for a place in this new field of art your opportunity is now—under the guidance of the Palmer institution.

The questionnaire—which will be sent free for a limited time, or until our quota of new students has been filled—is scientific and authoritative. It is perhaps the most courageous and, in fact, the first of this kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

Perhaps a new career awaits you if you can write acceptable photoplays. Learn if you can by sending for this interesting, confidential test. It is worth two cents to know. Send coupon for it.

Beautify Your Hair with "DANDERINE"

35c a bottle! Freshen your scalp! Stop falling hair! Remove dandruff! Have lots of wavy, glossy, beautiful hair! You can!

IF YOU care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it eradicates every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp, the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy, or too oily, get a bottle of Knowlton's Danderine, apply a little as directed, and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually, why not now?

JAMES KIRKWOOD, to be seen playing the lead in the picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "The Money Master," is not only an actor but is a director of parts. You remember how long he guided the endeavors of Mary Miles Minter?

Mr. Kirkwood was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., and educated there. He was on the stage for eighteen years, and, since pictures came into their own, has been identified with them in one way or another. He has played with Biograph, Universal, Mutual, American, Paramount, and various other companies.

In appearance, this decidedly popular actor and director is 6 feet tall, weighs 180 pounds, has sandy hair and bue eyes. Married? Yes, m'dears!

Mae Tinee

ELSIE FERGUSON is to appear in a new picture! The exclamation point is put there to attract your attention—you've all been inquiring so eagerly as to when, oh, when, would another picture featuring her be shown.

"Sacred and Profane Love" will be the name of her coming production and it will be released through Paramount.

You've had Miss Ferguson's biography a number of times, so no repetition as to that. You've never seen this particular gown of hers, however, and it will look well in your albums. The description says it is a French model of gold brocade with embroidery in two tones of green beads, coral and garnets. Ropes of pearls with pink amethyst give the effect of smashed glass.

'I can never thank Wallace enough; the course has brought me back a trim figure. * * * 'My gratitude is hard to express; I am now almost proud of my figure.' * * * 'I am 51 lbs. lighter and a new woman.' * * * 'The exercise to music is not only delightful, but has made me within 6 lbs. of the right weight for my height.' * * * 'My skin and complexion wonderfully improved.' * * * 'My figure is now almost what it was when a girl.' * * * 'I have not used a laxative since the first lesson.'

Get Thin to music!

AT HOME! With your own phonograph! My personally dictated records make it easy. I tell you exactly what to do, to restore a normal figure in two months, or less. My quick reduction course for women never fails; their letters prove it.

Wallace

My method makes play of reducing

Reducing the Wallace way is fun. Each lesson leaves you eager for the next. I tell you just how to do the exercises, and count for you throughout the lesson. My interesting records will make you exercise — to music. You'll no more think of the exertion than in dancing. Your enthusiasm will grow as you see and feel results. They come quickly. Yet, my natural method of removing superfluous flesh leaves a well-balanced figure—the real foundation of all womanly beauty.

Regardless of how stout you are —or where you are too fleshy—my course speedily reduces you to normal proportions. You will acquire grace of form, carriage, poise; a figure easily gowned. If you are but slightly overweight—fifteen pounds, twelve, or only five—let me put you at the weight where you will look your best.

My instruction by records with photographic poses is just as direct and resultful as if I stood before you. More convenient, for you take your daily lesson of 20 minutes whenever you like in absolutely privacy, without restraint.

Suppose you had enrolled for my reducing course only two short months ago—you might today feel as those women do whose letters are quoted in this announcement!

Your first lesson FREE

Don't pay for my services until I demonstrate their value. I'll put you through one lesson free, to prove what my course is worth. Then decide whether you wish to reduce this quick, effective way. You have seen this offer before. For your own sake, investigate it now. If you use coupon today, you can start reducing this week. Apply by mail only; fill in coupon with pencil.

WALLACE 166 West Jackson Boulevard CHICAGO

Send prepaid in plain wrapping, record for free lesson, prices, terms and complete information. I will return within three days or send my enrollment for entire reducing course with first payment of $5.

New importance for a familiar food

Many physicians are prescribing yeast---the richest available source of the mysterious vitamine

ONE vital element in food without which we cannot keep fit! This new discovery of science is startling thousands of men and women today.

Are we getting enough of this single element—this vitamine—in our everyday meals? Without it, scientists are agreed, we fall off in health.

A number of foods, notably spinach, contain this vitamine. But from many of our everyday foods it has been removed by the process of manufacture or preparation.

The richest known source of this vitamine is yeast. That is why thousands of men and women are adding the familiar little cake of Fleischmann's Yeast to their diet—to build up increased resistance to disease and to maintain natural, vigorous health and energy.

So great has been the scientific interest in this new importance of yeast that its value has been tested in leading medical institutions. Besides its food value, Fleischmann's Yeast was found to be successful in correcting ailments that often accompany a lowered state of health. Cases of acne (pimples) and boils have yielded rapidly to yeast treatment and even long, chronic cases of constipation have been corrected.

Yeast is a food, highly digestible, entirely wholesome. It is assimilated just like any other food. Only one precaution: If troubled with gas, dissolve yeast first in boiling water.

Eat from one to three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast a day. Eat it before or between meals. You will quickly learn to like its taste. Try it on bread or buttered toast; in milk, water or fruit juices; or just plain.

Place a standing order with your grocer for Fleischmann's Yeast and get it fresh daily.

To learn more about this interesting discovery—what it has meant to others and what it may mean to you, send for free booklet, "The New Importance of Yeast in Diet." Address The Fleischmann Company, Dept. 132-S, 701 Washington St., New York, N. Y.

A food, not a laxative

A New York physician writes: "Vitamines are readily supplied to the body in yeast, and we sometimes advise patients to eat a half cake of yeast three times a day, the yeast being stimulant in its nature to intestinal motility."

Thus Fleischmann's Yeast is a corrective food. Eaten regularly over a period of time, from two to four weeks, it helps restore normal body functions and gradually replaces laxatives. From 1 to 3 cakes a day is the usual amount.

FOR HE'S A JOLLY GOOD FELLOW, a Blue Ribbon short story.....By May Edginton

HOLLIS FENWICK, late of the A. E. F. air service, was not complaining, but he was beginning to wonder in a puzzled and good natured sort of way just when his luck was going to change. He had been in New York six months now and tonight had spent the last dollar of the little he had been able to save out of his army pay, leaving him, as his only capital, the shelter afforded by the room for which fortunately he had settled in advance. This, to be sure, did not solve the food problem, but it was always possible to exist a few days without food. He had proven that in France the time he had been forced to land in enemy territory with a broken wing and had crawled on an empty stomach those tedious miles back to his own lines. Some people might have seen a bit of irony in the fact that such an effort had led him in the end to nothing better than his present plight. But Fenwick by no means viewed it that way. His escape had already permitted him another six months of gorgeous fighting, a month in Paris after the armistice, and finally this last half year. As much more of life as this was worth while.

Even now, though he seemed at last to have been led into a blind alley, he was not worrying. He felt too fit for one thing. His meager diet of the last few weeks had taken off the weight he accumulated in those first days when he had been fêted as a hero and this was on the whole beneficial. Necessity had also cut down his allowance of tobacco and forced him, in answering one advertisement after another, to indulge in considerable exercise and this again was good for him.

He felt fit and curiously optimistic. It was late in August, but the nights were still warm enough to make Central park as comfortable a lounging place as most clubs. He had made a practice lately of remaining here until he was sure of falling asleep as soon as he reached the rather cheerless room he occupied off Seventh avenue. It was now after midnight, but he sat on with his long legs stretched out before him, his hands thrust in his trousers pockets, his thin, intelligent face—as unmarked after two years of fighting as a child's—upturned so that his black eyes rested on the deep purple of the night sky. He liked it there. It linked him up with some of the finest experiences of his life.

It was a singular fact that Fenwick, even in the most critical moments of actual combat, had never been able to make real to himself the possibility of death. This was not because he avoided the thought. It was not because of any religious or pagan faith. It was due rather to a conviction that he was possessed of a capacity for living calling for fulfillments which he knew he had not then, and had not now, even approximated. He had had, to be sure, his hours, but those so far he felt to have been accidental. The big things were still to come. They were to come, he had a notion, right here in New York, because it was here, in these last few months, he had felt more keenly than ever the sting of unsatisfied desires. A dozen times he had, it seemed to him, been on the very threshold of some fresh beginning. The face of a woman glimpsed in a crowd, a doorway on some cross street off the avenue, a passing limousine, would make him stop short as though he heard a voice calling his name. He would pause as before a door about to open only to go on again with a smile. The door never opened and yet he remained just as sure as ever that only some unfortunate chance kept it closed. Somewhere back of this invisible curtain now shutting him off that woman and that voice and that life were awaiting the inevitable moment. This feeling, tonight, was stronger than usual.

For the first time, Fenwick saw her in her full glory.

Given the chance, given half a chance, and Fenwick would know with a sure instinct how to make the most of it. Somewhere in the past a Fenwick of larger means than any living Fenwick of whom he had ever heard must have taught him not how to make money but how to use it. Because he knew, and always had known, how to spend. Yet he had been born with little. His father, a dreaming promoter in the west, had made fortunes for others, but had been able to keep little for himself. He had sent his son through one of the state colleges, but the latter to eke out his small allowance had been obliged to work during the summers in the hay fields while classmates with keener wits for money getting had earned twice his wages with half the effort. None of them, however, had received one-half the return for dollars earned that Fenwick had. Then the war broke and his hard muscles and clear eyes and steady nerves acquired in the hay fields counted for him in an unexpected way. But they did not count for much here in New York just now.

Fenwick sat on in the park until two in the morning. The night air was getting cool, but he hated to leave, because as soon as he shut himself up in his room he shut himself away from the intimate contact with this old city that he felt out here. He resented sleep. He resented it more than ever this evening. Never had he felt more on edge; never had he appreciated more what life had to offer could a man but grasp it. All he asked for was half a chance—just a fighting chance. He had been willing to accept anything in the way of work and actually had picked up a few dollars cleaning windows. But that job had not lasted. However, the morrow was full of possibilities. The next minute was full of possibilities. That was why he liked to keep awake. With the situation growing tense he needed every second.

Fenwick buttoned his coat tighter. He sprinted a hundred yards down the path and back again with the lightness of an athlete. This set his blood racing through his veins, but also sharpened his appetite, which was bad business. He felt in his pockets on the slight chance of finding a forgotten cigaret, but lost out. This time it sure looked as though he were flat up against it.

Yet, as he told himself, that was manifestly impossible. A man at twenty-three in sound health and with five good senses and with dreams, a thousand unfulfilled dreams, was only at the beginning, not the end. The harder he was pressed, the nearer the beginning he must be. It was with him only the matter of means—plain, sordid, material means. And all about him were thousands with more than they knew how to use. He did not envy them. He pitied them. Given the choice between his position and theirs and he would stay where he was. Unfulfilled dreams were better than no dreams at all. At least he was alive—alive to his finger tips and they were dead in their golden caskets.

An east wind coming in from the harbor finally drove Fenwick toward his room. Rounding the first turn of the graveled path, he passed the dejected figure of a young man in evening clothes seated on one of the benches and leaning forward head in hands. He went on, but before passing the next corner glanced back. He could not see the fellow's face, but there was something in the shape of his head that made him search his memory, quite, however, to no purpose. He was about to continue when the young man made a move that stopped Fenwick in his tracks. The stranger, after a swift look around, reached in a hip pocket and drew out an object that brought Fenwick back with a shout. Startled, the man paused to turn, which gave Fenwick the second he needed to reach his side. The two stared at each other.

"Teele!" exclaimed Fenwick.

Teele turned his eyes to the ground at sound of the voice, but choked out a surly:

"Well?"

"What the devil——"

"I'm through," he trembled. "Is that any business of yours?"

Fenwick knew that, strictly speaking, it was not, but he had flown with this man over Flanders. He had faced death by his side. At least a dozen times Teele as his observer had helped him to fight his way home through German Fokkers. It was this same Teele now before him who had done that—Roger Teele of New York, son of Ira Teele, the man who out of his own pocket had equipped a dozen hospital units.

Fenwick stood alert. He knew from experience how quick of hand and eye this man was and, though his arm was hanging limply by his side, he still held the weapon. But Fenwick was certain that, if watchful, he could keep the jump on him.

"Teele," he said, "you're the last man in the world I'd expect anything like this of."

"Go on and let me alone," muttered Teele.

"Not on your life!"

"Then——"

Teele made a movement and quick as lightning Fenwick pinned his hand to his side. The two men were of about the same age and size, but there was no strength in Teele's arm. The latter, without protest, dropped the automatic and kicked it into the bushes.

"If that's what's worrying you," he commented gruffly. "Forget it now and let go my arm."

Fenwick released his grip and Teele slumped back on the bench.

"What you doing here anyway, Fenwick?" Teele demanded.

"A moment ago I didn't know," he answered. "Maybe it was for this."

"Then you've wasted your time."

"As things are going now my time isn't valuable enough to make it possible to waste it."

"Out of luck?" asked Teele with a show of real interest.

"Out of work. But you——"

"Just forget me," broke in Teele. "I'm not worth talking about."

"If you've reached that point, you are. But, man, it's getting cold out here. I've got a room on Seventh. Come on over there with me."

For a second Teele hesitated. He was not in a mood for talking to anyone, but the curious circumstance of Fenwick's appearance, as though out of the sky, at this, the most critical moment of his life, interested him, even though he still resented his interference as unwarranted. Fenwick had always interested him after a fashion from the first day he had met him in France. Of all the men over there he had not found one who succeeded in getting as much sustained fun out of the game or any one who took it more seriously than Fenwick. The fellow was as freshly enthusiastic about every detail of it—including the stupid details— as a school boy. Once he had spent with him a three day furlough in Paris and had almost been persuaded that Paris was still the old Paris, though he had been obliged to trot along and view all the points of historic interest, even to the tomb of Napoleon.

"Come on," urged Fenwick, "I'm going to hang to you until morning, so you might as well."

Teele raised his haggard face.

"You come with me," he said, finally. "I live nearer than Seventh."

Fenwick nodded and Teele led the way to Fifth avenue, and in the fifties turned off abruptly to the right, stopping before a stone house. As Fenwick paused before the closed door while Teele searched for his night key, he experienced another of those odd illusions which had haunted him off and on ever since his arrival. The house was not familiar in the sense that he had ever seen it before, yet it was familiar. This was one of those he had been waiting to see open before him. Fenwick held his breath until Teele found the key. Then, as though in a dream, he watched him fit it into the lock and finally swing the door wide. When Teele beckoned, Fenwick went up the steps two at a time.

A hall opened into a large living room, which, though dimly lighted by a single lamp left burning on a table before a dying open fire, impressed him at once with a sense of luxurious comfort and good taste. It was both warm and colorful—seeming the more so coming upon it so unexpectedly out of the dark of a night turning cold. Heavy rugs of reds and purples made his steps noiseless, while on the walls he saw vaguely portraits and landscapes in oils framed in deep gold frames. To the left a winding staircase with small white posts led upstairs. Teele beckoned him on up those and he followed with a feeling of regret at so soon leaving all this behind. But immediately he was ushered into a suite leading from the upper hall with quite as delightful an atmosphere as that of the room below. These were Teele's own apartments, reserved as such for him since he was a boy. Here again an open fire was burning and a lighted lamp awaiting.

Fenwick felt as though by some Arabian Nights magic he had been whisked into another world. He stared around with frank enthusiasm at the solid, substantial royal Beauty of it all. Then he turned to Teele, who, stooping over the fire, was trying to warm his thin white hands.

"Lord, man, you weren't planning to leave all this?"

Teele rose and rested his heavy eyes on the other.

"All what?" he asked.

"The things here and all they suggest."

"I've got a roof over my head and plenty to eat, if that's what you mean," he answered dully.

"And money—plenty of money."

"Of course," returned Teele, as though the fact were too obvious to be worth mentioning.

"And five good senses. You don't look fit, Teele, but you don't look sick."

"I'm not sick."

"Then what the devil—is it love?"

"Rot."

"A family row?"

"I couldn't stir up a fuse with the old man if I tried."

"But you've sure messed things somehow. You meant that gun play."

"And I mean it still," trembled Teele. "You butted in a minute too soon, so it would be over now and a good job done. Sit down, Fen. Smoke?"

He offered Fenwick a cigaret from a gold monogrammed case. The latter accepted one automatically. Teele lighted one and sank into a chair before the fire.

"Your coming makes it seem like melodrama," he began slowly. "But I've planned the thing for a week. It was only the thought of the old man which made me hesitate. God, Fen, why couldn't I have ended it in France? I was over the lines that last day—the very last day. Three of 'em got after me and pumped the old bird full of holes, but I came down safe. I was up five thousand feet and came down safe and without a scratch. With a bit of luck I might have got out of it then with all the hero stuff thrown in."

"Out of what?" demanded Fenwick sharply.

"Out of the bally stupidness of living. It was a great game over there while it lasted, but any man who came back made a mistake."

"You've got to scratch me off that list," interjected Fenwick.

"Because you haven't been back long enough. I've been here five months now."

"I've been here six," grinned Fenwick.

"Then God pity you."

"Pity me?"

"The days are so long and the nights so much longer!" went on Teele. "I'm sick of it all—sick of the sight of food and the sight of booze and the sight of Broadway. I've done it over and over again since I got back. I had to. There wasn't anything else. There isn't anything else. And what's the use of that?"

"I don't know," answered Fenwick through half closed eyes. "But I do know that if you managed right—Lord what a chance you've got."

"For what?"

"To live! To live, man!" exclaimed Fenwick sitting straight.

"Where?"

"Here—right in this wonderful old city. Teele, I've been hanging around six months as a rank outsider. I've only been able to look over the wall and watch the others. But, believe me, even that little has been worth while. I wouldn't give up a day of it. I'm going to stick on just as much longer as I can keep a toe hold. And when I begin to slip I'm going to dig in with my finger nails. When I go they'll have to carry me off kicking. Yet here you are, firmly established on the right side of the wall with every resource it's possible to have and not seeing your opportunities. It's a bit queer, isn't it, Teele?"

Fenwick rose and studied the other a second with a whimsical smile.

"Lord," he exclaimed, "I'd like the chance to manage your life for a month."

With a flush of color Teele glanced up. He met Fenwick's clean, confident eyes.

"Just what do you mean by that?"

"I'd like to be your manager. Why not? Actors and prize fighters have 'em and this game of living is a bigger profession than either the drama or the prize ring. You've bungled things because you've been too close."

Fenwick was still smiling. But Teele was serious. He rose abruptly.

"You said you were out of work."

Fenwick nodded.

"Then—then why don't you take me on like a bankrupt business? Come and live with me; gather up the assets such as they are and see what you can do with them. I'm not worth your time Fen, but I'll turn over everything I have on your own terms."

Fenwick was startled. He had not meant to be taken as literally as this.

"It might amuse you even if—if nothing more came of it," pleaded Teele.

The worried face had already taken on a new expression. Fenwick turned aside and swept his eyes across the room once more as though making a swift estimate of just what the assets were with which he would have to deal. And then he chanced upon the framed photograph hanging to the left of the fireplace. He had not noticed it before, but from that moment he wondered that he had seen anything else. Like a living presence this young woman, seated, her clasped hands holding a big chrysanthemum, met his eyes steady and direct and questioning. And when he moved nearer, drawn as though answering her voice, she did not withdraw her eyes, but seemed almost to throw back her head a trifle in a more open challenge. She was one of those to whom is given the privilege of accepting admiration not in any spirit of vanity, but as a rightful tribute. Because she was quite perfect. Below a mass of hair one exquisite line after another traced her high forehead, her straight nose, her gently firm mouth, her finely molded chin and finally the contour of her slim, young form. And yet Fenwick was conscious of the fact that this was but the setting. Beautiful as it was he came back to the eyes even here in this immobile picture limited to lights and shadows gathered in the fraction of a single heart beat. But that brief period had been long enough to leave a true record because these were eyes that hid nothing.

Fenwick turned to Teele.

"Who is that?" he asked.

"The one on the wall? That's Nance Sedgewick. We grew up together."

"She's here—in New York?"

"I had a note from her the other day. She's just back for the season."

"And you haven't seen her yet?"

Teele shook his head.

"Man," said Fenwick slowly. "If you've missed that chance I guess you do need a manager. I'll take the job, Teele."

The next day Fenwick moved his few belongings from his ugly little room on Seventh avenue to one of the luxurious guest chambers in the Teele house. A few hours before he had been down to as near bedrock as it is safe for a man to go, and now he was reveling in the surroundings of a millionaire. No one could have done that little thing with a keener relish, for every one of his five senses responded. This did not, to be sure, promise anything for the future, but he was content for a space to forget the future. It was enough to be able, even for a little while, to surrender himself completely to the magic of this crisp world of immaculate cleanliness and soft color and comfort around him.

The room he occupied, large and high studded, was more simply furnished than Teele's, but it was with the simplicity of good taste and careful choice. From the heavy mahogany four poster to the rare old highboy, from the rugs on the floor to the fine pictures on the wall, the artist who designed the room had been limited only by his sense of the beautiful. And something of this feeling of freedom of action, uncramped by money considerations, he had left behind. Fenwick caught it and it made him feel as though he had suddenly been released from chains.

But, too, Fenwick realized his obligations. He had on his hands a man-size job and took it seriously. Had he been tempted to forget this that haunting face on the wall would have reminded him. For ever since she had called to him he had felt that his obligation was as much to her as to Teele. And an obligation to her was something that any man must respect.

Last night he had tried to get Teele to talk about her, but without much success.

"She's a good sort," Teele answered. "I've known her all my life because her mother was an old family friend. Of late years I haven't seen as much of Nance as before, for she's been off to college and of course I've been away too. But what's your interest?"

"Nothing, only—you say she's been back in town now three days?"

"I believe so."

"You ought to get in touch with her," concluded Fenwick.

At noon Teele had not yet put in an appearance and Fenwick went down to rouse him. Obviously one of the first things to do was to get the man back into physical condition, and this Fenwick meant to undertake at once. He woke him unceremoniously, hustled him through his bath, into his clothes and out doors. Teele protested only once and that was to ask:

"What's the hurry?"

"We've wasted half a day already," answered Fenwick. "We won't now have more than time to get in our walk and get back for dinner."

"Eh? How far we going?"

"We're going so far that when you hit your bed at nine you'll sleep until I get you up tomorrow at five. You've got your schedule turned inside out and I mean to turn it back."

"But, look here——"

"You're under orders for a month," interrupted Fenwick. "Remember you're in the hands of a receiver. Get that clear, because unless you do I quit now."

"Lead on," grumbled Teele.

Fenwick did and kept on mile after mile straight out Broadway until three and then back again. There was good stuff in Teele and Fenwick wanted to get down to it. It was five when Fenwick led him, muscle sore, dog tired and dust covered, back to the shower. But Teele had an appetite for the first time in a month.

At dinner that evening Fenwick met Teele senior, a rather austere man of sixty with coolly critical gray eyes, a white beard close trimmed, immaculate in dress and with the poise and confidence of one who has long handled successfully large affairs. He had greeted Fenwick at first with a questioning frown, but his eyes warmed instantly as his son explained that Fenwick was a flying mate come to spend a month with him.

"I hope to be able to learn from you more of what you boys did in France than I've been able to learn from Roger," he smiled.

If he failed it was not because of the questions he asked during dinner. And he even continued them after they had adjourned to the library. He was interested and while his son sat in silence Fenwick talked intelligently and willingly. He rose to go at eight—for bridge at his club as he explained—but before he left he found an opportunity to say, sotto voce, to Fenwick.

"I'm glad you're here, for I've been a bit worried about Roger. It may brace him up to live over again those days in France."

But as Fenwick saw it neither the past nor the future counted for the moment against the present. And for the present nothing counted for Teele more than sleep, food and exercise. He sent him off to bed that night at nine, got him up the next morning at five for a short run through the park before breakfast, followed that with a shower and rub down and at about ten took the machine for the country club. It was not, however, until the third day that Fenwick unearthed this hidden asset. And it was not until a day after this that he discovered in connection with the club the most important feature it possessed.

With Teele he was sitting late one afternoon after a stiff game of tennis and a shower, on the broad veranda overlooking the acres of green velvet comprising the golf course when approaching the house from the eighteenth hole, he saw her. Her cheeks flushed with exercise, her hair loosened about her temples, she came on laughing good naturedly at the banter of the young man by her side or to answer the other two of the foursome who followed. Fenwick rose at sight of her with the exclamation,

"That's she."

Teele glanced up indifferently.

"Yes," he nodded. "That's Nance."

So for the first time, Fenwick saw her in her full glory; a living thing of color and movement and flashing black eyes which the photographer had been unable to register. So, too, he heard for the first time her voice, soft and vibrant, affecting him like music.

The group, engrossed in a discussion of the game just ended, was passing on when Fenwick turned to Teele.

"Lord, man," he said, "she didn't see us! She's going by."

But she did not go by. Although it was impossible for her to have heard his voice, she stopped and turned sharply to face him. So for the first time their eyes met. Not often is such a detail significant enough to be worth remembering. All his life Fenwick had been meeting eyes, and yet out of the thousands, hundreds of thousands, he could have told, save only a few, nothing about them a second later except that they were eyes. He knew his father's eyes because of the disappointed dreams in them, and he knew his mother's eyes because of the patient joy in them. All others were blank—even his own. But for the space of three full seconds his own now rested on those of Nance Sedgewick, and when for courtesy's sake he turned away it was as though he were leaving a beautiful garden.

She spoke to her friends and led them straight towards him, walking with the grace and strength of some woods creature. She waved to Teele as he rose.

"T," she exclaimed as she extended her hand, "I don't think you've been very nice to me. Back a whole week and——"

A medley of introductions followed. Fenwick noted particularly the name of the young man with her. It was Downsley. A Mr. Close was the other man and a Miss Mathews the other girl—the latter as he was with Teele in a better humor than he had ever seen him. Fenwick found it hard to with some exasperation. "You see, I found myself in a devil of a hole all of a sudden—with the body of a girl dumped on my hands. As I told you before, the first thing I thought of was my wife. I was going to save her from it or know why. When I thought it over, getting her buried in that way seemed pretty simple and it seemed that that ought to end it. Of course, I was sorry for the girl, but she was dead anyhow. It seemed pretty simple. If I had known what was going to happen I'd have taken other steps. But I didn't know. I got into it and I got McKeon into it, and now that this other business has come up I'm going on through with it. The only way I see now is to get the body out of sight—sink it at sea, I should say. It can be managed."

Danforth completely understood his father's justification, and sympathized with it. Having gotten into it, he himself would go on through without quailing.

"We've got to trust somebody," the judge continued, thinking it over and meaning that he and Danforth could hardly manage it themselves. "We may as well take a chance on your Cordwainer man. Can you get hold of him now? I'd want to do it tonight. He struck you as a man to be trusted, did he?"

"Yes—fairly," Danforth replied. "I'd as leave take a chance on him as on anybody else. We can pay him so well that he can afford to forget it."

"Well, let's get hold of him and see what he has to say," said the judge.

But the Cordwainer man had already suggested to Danforth that the body might be removed and he had vetoed that suggestion for a cogent reason. He still had the same reason for opposing it.

"You'd be protecting somebody else, too, father," he suggested. "I mean Ted Pennell. He has no right to protection."

"Well, no—so far as he alone is concerned," the judge assented.

"He's put himself out of the game," Danforth went on. "I have a right to see that he keeps out."

"Maybe you have, son," said the judge; "but he's all tied up with these other people. I don't know how I can protect them without protecting him, too." A somewhat harsher energy showed in his voice and for a moment he avoided looking at his son—feeling that a contest was rising between them.

Danforth also for the moment avoided looking at his father, but he said, conclusively, "He's got to keep out of it. The body's my hold on him. I don't want it moved tonight."

So the issue was joined between them.

"But maybe he's got Peggy already, Dan," the judge reminded him. "I'm afraid it's too late already."

Danforth drew a thick hand over his forehead and replied, more slowly than usual:

"Well, if it's too late, it's too late. If she's married him, that settles it. I'll stand by her the best I know how and be her friend, as I've been her friend all my life." In saying it his voice trailed down to a lower key.

"If I've got to swallow that medicine, I'll swallow it and make no faces in public." A little sigh escaped him, for Peggy's image was in his mind.

"But it may not be too late. They may not be married. If they're not, I don't propose that they shall be. He has no right to her. . . . She was in love with him. I suppose he think's he's in love with her. He has youth in his favor, father. He has selfishness in his favor, too. If he comes back here now and there's no evidence against him and he tells her a good lie and looks woebegone and whistles the tune, she may go to him. Peggy's only a girl yet. That's not going to happen. I can have her now; I feel sure of it. It's only by one chance in a hundred—and his idiocy—that I could have had her. The one chance has come to me. It shan't get out of my hands. I'll fight like all hell for it. I think I have a right to, father."

BAND NIGHT

By Oney Fred Sweet

THE folks in Grain Valley were no different from the folks in any community when it came to enjoying a band concert. On the program of the chautauqua that came to Grain Valley during harvest time every summer there were lectures that some liked and other didn't; there were operatic singers who brought ecstacy to a part of the town and left another portion of it cold; but band night was an occasion that satisfied and stirred and soothed one and all.

Band night brought in the farmers from twenty miles around. It filled the big khaki colored tent to capacity, filled the collapsible chairs that were put into service far out around the outside of the tent, filled the surrounding streets with closely parked automobiles. No heart but what could be touched by the blend of brass and reed. The blare of it set pulses to pounding, and the rhythm of it soothed.

The attendance at the afternoon concert was not so large as it was at night. Oats must be cut and shocked when they are ripe. Yet Abner Denison was in town early in the afternoon of band day. Several of the merchants along Main street who observed him remarked that it was odd, but they figured that possibly he had had a breakdown with some of his machinery. Yet he did not look as though he had driven to town hurriedly. He was dressed as for the Sabbath.

Abner was a man somewhere in the forties. He was rather an unusual type in that he had been raised in town, and after finishing high school had gone on to a nearby farm. That he had prospered was not at all unusual. Yet the years he had scrimped had left their mark upon him.

He ate his lunch at the Palace café and afterwards he went and sat out in front on the lawn seat beneath the awning. From this vantage point he would be able to observe every one who would attend the chautauqua that afternoon; they would be obliged to pass by on their way to the tent in the west edge of town.

The last parasol and the last cane and the last bare foot had gone by, and still he sat there. Inside the café he could hear Clara Muffley and Hattie Naughton, who waited on the tables that were located beyond the candy and cigar counters, discussing the band boys who had eaten their dinner there. Clara thought the tall, dark haired one had been the cutest of the bunch, and Hattie was sure that the one with horn-rimmed glasses had winked behind the spectacles which she referred to as the "substitute for a four years' college course."

Abner scarcely heard their chatter. The girls were strangers to him, as were so many of the folks in town now. It was a town that changed in population though it did not increase in population. It was the folks who had grown up since he himself had been a boy on the streets whom he had trouble "placing."

He arose from the seat in front of the café and walked into the residence section of the town. He passed a house that had been built in the early days—a small, one story affair. The maples in front of it had grown large. He walked by the place quickly the first time, and scarcely glanced toward the drawn front curtains. At the end of the street he turned back, and this time he passed the house slowly. Again he passed the house, and this time he kept on going until he came to the creek bridge.

The creek below was flowing rather listlessly. The rank grass and weeds, dust laden, almost invaded its channel. Abner crossed the bridge, and left the street that was now country road. He climbed through the wire fence at the roadside, and followed the creek but a few rods. The town might be miles away now. He was far from its sight and sounds.

"She couldn't have gone to the chautauqua," he told himself. "I watched until they had all gone by. She must have been there at the house."

A kingfisher hovered above the cattails in the creek beneath him, and scolded in sharp tones that broke the silence. He could have told the bird that he had known that particular bend of the creek long, long before its time. Yet, after all, it was the bird's sacred precincts.

Abner experienced the ache that is associated with any man's return to a spot familiar to boyhood. The walnut tree that spread its branches above the calm place in the creek and cast its black shadows there seemed to taunt him with the fact that his hair had grown thin and fine lines had etched themselves about his eyes and his lips had grown firm. This was the play place of a newer generation.

"I might have stopped in at the house and made sure if she was there or not," he chided himself. He sat down in the shade of the walnut tree and tossed a dried stem, a clod of dirt, into the water.

Up toward the bridge a minnow leaped out of the water. He glanced in the direction of the sound and noticed how profusely a certain white flowered plant blossomed in a patch on the opposite bank of the stream. He had never known the name for the vegetation. He could not recall having noticed it since boyhood. He knew it was a plant that waited for late July and August to bloom—knew that it had bloomed just that way, regardless of how it was appreciated, during the twenty years since he had visited the pasture.

Well, he had stuck pretty close to plowing and planting and picking corn these twenty years—out where the sun came straight down save for the interruption furnished by the evergreen windbreak by the house. Now his acres had leaped in price. He could buy any priced car he fancied, and as for player pianos and talking machines—he wondered if she would appreciate a phonograph; she hadn't gone to the band concert.

"Maybe the old man she's taken care of these years is not as well as usual," he said to himself, "or maybe—maybe she isn't well."

His eyes narrowed, and he noticed how the afternoon sunshine streamed golden through a grapevine beneath the thick shade of the oaks. He remembered now that the sunshine always had that peculiar golden tint in August.

He arose from the grass and walked back across the bridge; and this time when he came to the house he turned in and walked up to the door. He walked around to the back door, the front door and the screen being locked, apparently for the summer. It was cool and shady at the back of the house. An old man sat there in a rocker—her father. He did not even nod—merely lifted his eyes that no longer saw things of the present.

It was some time after he had knocked that she came to the door. He saw the gray streaks in her hair, but her eyes were as black as they had been in school days, and she still had that smile that in the long ago made him feel so helpless.

"The band is going to play at the chautauqua tonight," he began, much after the fashion of an agent for sewing machines or vacuum cleaners. "I came to ask if you didn't want to go."

She was a woman. And she understood as he stood there—knew at once that he had loved her all these years without letting her know; knew how much it had cost him to come to her now, knew of heart pangs that were like her own; knew that weeks before he had set "band night" as the time apropos; knew better than to ask why he had never come before; knew that love could flame as suddenly at forty as at twenty.

And if, woman-like, she was conscious of what time had done to her since the days when Abner had known her best, she saw also that he was not an Adonis. Quickly, she bridged the gap between the boy that had been and the man that was.

"And you wanted to ask me something else, Abner?" she asked.

"Well," he smiled, with a sigh of relief which showed that she had put him at ease, "you know and the whole town would know that I wouldn't go through all I have this afternoon simply to take you to a band concert."

Next morning, in the Palace cafe, Clara Muffley and Hattie Naughton were comparing notes as they queened at their tasks in the tissue paper decorated dining room.

"I told that trombone player when he took me home last night," confided Clara, "that it wasn't my fault I lived here in Grain Valley. I told him there wasn't any romance here, never had been, or ever would be."

"You said it, Clara," agreed Hattie with a yawn. "Ain't no romance around here, never has been, or never will be."

MANAGERS

room to breathe in, content to be alone with her as he had been content to be alone with the roses which filled his room with their fragrance. Quite unexpectedly both to himself and to her he said:

"It was you who sent them."

"Yes," she answered, understanding.

That was all, and then he was inside being introduced to her mother, who was but herself a few years older. Then Miss Mathews, looking even prettier and younger than before, was greeting him like some old friend. They helped him off with his coat and led him to an easy chair in the bright sun parlor and in other ways made him quite as uncomfortable as he had been in those early hero days when he was just back and still in uniform. He was glad enough when Teele joined them. But in less than two minutes, when Fenwick was just beginning to get his bearings, Teele turned everything topsy turvy again.

"Nance," he announced with decision, "I can't hold in any longer. I'm going to tell Fen."

"Well—silly——"

"Fen," he blurted out bluntly, "I'm engaged."

Fenwick heard the words. His fingers were resting on the arms of a wicker chair and they clutched at the rattan. There was no excuse for that. This was nothing more than he had anticipated—nothing more than he had planned. Furthermore, it was right—absolutely right and sound. He had been the only one of this group to perceive that from the start, because he was the only one with perspective.

He tried to rise from his chair to extend congratulations, but Teele checked him, with his hand on his shoulder.

"Sit still, old man," cautioned Teele. "We were keeping this quiet because—well, there are certain formalities to be completed. Doris' father and mother arrive tomorrow to look me over."

"Doris?" muttered Fenwick.

Teele smiled at the burning scarlet in Miss Mathews' cheeks. Then he crossed to her side and took her hand.

"Pretty crafty I'll say we are," he chuckled. "Even Nance suspected nothing until a few days ago."

Mrs. Sedgewick broke in with a good natured laugh.

"You may discover some day that Nance——"

"Mother!" interrupted the latter.

So the banter went on, while Fenwick, fingers relaxed, spiraled up and up and up into the space where the morning stars sing together for joy.

. . . . . .

It may be all very well to venture into those dizzy heights, but in the end a man must needs come back to earth. New York is not up there. Ask any real estate agent. He would not swap a million acres of sky blue fields dotted with morning stars for a square foot of any land on Long Island. In Kansas they have even passed laws against such barter.

Fenwick came down with a thump that rattled his bones the moment he stepped into the car and rode back to Teele's house.

"It won't do," he kept saying over and over to himself. "It won't do."

That evening he said the same thing out loud to Teele.

"What won't do?" returned the latter.

"I've no right here. I've no right out there. I——"

"Still worrying about a job?"

"For one thing."

"Well, you might leave something to your manager. I've attended to that."

"You've what?"

"Dad asked me a while ago if I knew where he could get two bright young men to help him in his office. You're his secretary on thirty-five hundred a year if you want the position."

"I'll begin work tomorrow," exclaimed Fenwick.

"Not tomorrow, because I've arranged a full week for Father and Mother Mathews, and I'm going to need Nance and you to help."

"You don't need me for that. With Nance——"

"Man, dear," answered Teele slowly. "Can't you see an opportunity when it's put right under your nose?"

. . . . . .

Teele always claimed that the marriage of Nance Sedgewick and Fenwick, which occurred in January with his own, was due entirely to his clever management. In fact, he once said as much to Mrs. Sedgewick. That good lady thought a moment and then made a remark which has always puzzled Teele more or less.

"Perhaps," she said. "Perhaps. Managers are capable of accomplishing much—if only they are properly managed."

for a long time, he said. Naturally I wanted him to go a long way off for a long time myself. Ferguson is going to start for Russia next week, you know. I thought of that. It would be just about the job for him. But I wanted him out of the way meanwhile—not having much more confidence in his good sense than in anything else about him. So I asked him if he knew some place where he could go and keep still until I sent him word and he mentioned a place down in New Jersey. That seemed all right temporarily, and he promised me, honor bright, that he'd stay right there and never take a step away until he heard from me.

"But even after he'd gone I was sort of worried about Peggy. Naturally I hadn't much confidence in Ted. I don't doubt he's in love with Peggy—in his way. And I don't doubt she's in love with him. With a girl in love you never can tell what fool thing may happen. So I gave Peggy a good broad warning—the best I could under the circumstances—and I thought, coming from me, she'd pay attention to it. I told her if she was my girl she shouldn't commit herself to Ted Pennell. You see, I was afraid he'd slip up here after her or get her to come to him. I thought very likely if he got away where he couldn't see her, and thought he was going off a good way—separated from her for a long time—he must begin to cry for his cake. So I gave her the best warning I could."

He was scowling and loath over the thought in his mind. "It wasn't until yesterday afternoon that I heard Peggy had left here. You know Judy. If she lost a leg somebody would have to remind her of it. She said Peggy'd gone down to see the Cotter girls, near Quincy—unconcerned as you please. Not having any confidence in Judy, either, I just came back here and called up the Cotters—not giving my own name, but asking for Peggy. The answer was that she hadn't been there. Then I called up Ted's place in New Jersey and the answer was that he'd left there—taken the train for New York. . . . So there that stands, Dan. I don't like the looks of it."

Danforth's face was impassive and he attempted no reply; but it struck him like a blow from a sledge hammer. In a moment he muttered, "I hadn't thought of that."

"No," said the judge. . . . "Well, what's anybody to do? I don't know. If you start a hullabaloo you're a mighty sight more apt to do harm than good. Peggy may have gone somewhere else than the Cotters'. Ted may have just run up to New York. But I don't like the looks of it. I've been on nettles ever since yesterday afternoon for fear a message might come that they were married somewhere or other." He frowned harder over that a moment, and added, with exasperation. "But that don't seem like Peggy, either; don't seem as though she'd do that. Seems like she had too much sense—and character. Maybe she's just gone somewhere else. Maybe she's just let him persuade her to meet him somewhere and talk it over. But—a girl in love—it does make me damned nervous," he concluded, thrusting his fingers through his hair. "I'll feel a mighty sight better when I know there's nothing happened. . . . Of course if she's run off and married him there's nothing to do but make the best of it."

It would be a poor best for Danforth—youth triumphant in the end, in spite of its enormous follies, and himself forever defeated. Probably it was only in this moment that he realized how mightily he had built on his hope of Peggy. He had to swallow, and his voice was husky as he said, "I suppose there's nothing to do but wait and see."

"Why, I don't see what else we can do, Dan," the judge replied. "If nothing has happened I wouldn't want to be the one to start any disturbance—about Peggy in that way. And if they're married there's nothing more to be said. . . . At least we can wait a day. Some word is bound to come soon, I should think." In a moment he looked up at his son, adding, "And so, you see, it may be up to us to keep the thing dark for Peggy's sake, too. If she's married him we don't want her dragged into this mess—publicly."

"That's true," Danforth assented, and with this new light on the affair he added, "But it's known already. Hilton knows about it."

"Hilton?" the judge exclaimed sharply. "How?"

"I don't know how," Danforth replied. "But I know he knows about it. He came to me with it this morning. Seems he's been stealing some of your Alpha Oil debentures. He proposes to use this Katey business to square the account—blackmail, of course. I think you best see him now; or we might see him together."

Being no putter-off Judge Crane immediately reached over and pushed a button on the table, at the same time asking Danforth, "What does he know?"

"Well, he knows about somebody being buried up there near Stony Cove on the strength of a death certificate signed by Dr. McKeon," Danforth replied. "Whether or not he knows positively that that girl up there is Katey I don't know. I didn't cross-examine him, but told him to see you. At any rate he seems to know enough so he might demand an official order to exhume the body and have it identified."

The judge pondered that for some time and remarked, "Guess I ain't as smart as I thought I was."

Benjamin appeared in the doorway and the judge said to him, "See if you can find Mr. Hilton and ask him to come up here right away."

The butler happened to know where Mr. Hilton was, or where he had been only a few minutes before, so he went there to find him and having found him delivered the message. Three or four minutes later Hilton knocked on the door of the judge's study, then at once opened the door and stepped in. There was a slight, disagreeable smile on his lips—in the nature of a swagger—and his face was flushed. He had hardly reached the table near which Judge Crane and Danforth sat before both of them perceived that he had been drinking recklessly—not exactly drunk, perhaps, by the common definition of that word, for he walked in a straight line; but certainly a long way from sober.

"You want to see me?" he asked, smiling, with that little swagger in his tone, as he helped himself to a chair.

"Yes," the judge replied—himself very sober indeed. "Danforth tells me you've been to him with a story about a maid named Katey who left my house last week."

"Did he tell you the story, judge?" said Hilton, impudently.

"No; tell it to me now," the judge answered.

"Oh, very well," Hilton replied, the last drink that he had swallowed before coming upstairs reddening his mind. "Katey was killed here in your house. Her body was carried down to the laundry and taken to Dr. Bradford McKeon's that night. Next day McKeon bought a coffin in Windham—Furness is the undertaker's name. He issued a death certificate and Katey was buried near Stony Cove. The body has been positively identified."

"How do you know?" the judge demanded.

Hilton looked over at him as one scorning the crucial point in a game and replied, "Cordwainer."

The name struck Danforth with a disagreeable surprise and his thought at once turned vengefully to Mr. Eastman. "Has Cordwainer been here?" he asked.

"No," Hilton replied, with assurance, "but one of his operatives named Miss Jenny George has been here. The body has been positively identified. And don't forget," he added warningly, "that it can be identified again—today, if necessary." In his alcoholic assurance he had determined to press the affair to settlement that day.

The judge pondered that for a moment and Hilton went on, confidently, "not that I particularly want to stir up a mess, you know. I'm ready enough to let it rest. It's simply this: We all make our mistakes. I've made mine; you've made yours. I'm ready to wipe the slate and call it quits if you are."

"I don't much like being blackmailed," Judge Crane remarked after a moment.

"Well, judge," said Hilton, with impudent and alcoholic assurance, "you shouldn't put yourself in a position to be blackmailed, then—if you want to call it that. I've got a receipt in my pocket for two million seven hundred and fifty thousand Alpha Oil debentures. Just sign that and I've nothing more to say."

"Cordwainer might have something more to say," the judge commented.

"You know Cordwainer as well as I do, or better," Hilton replied. "He has his reputation. I never heard him accused of blackmail. You know he couldn't afford it. His business is mostly in Wall Street. A quiet word spread around by you would queer him for ever. You oughtn't to have anything to fear from him."

All of which was quite true, as Judge Crane acknowledged to himself.

"Besides," Hilton added significantly, "in a month or two there'll be nothing to dig up that anybody could recognize. The secret will bury itself for keeps in a few weeks. Nobody could raise a finger then—unless McKeon goes back on you, and I guess you've no fear of that."

That also was true enough. All the logic was in Hilton's favor; by the mathematical rules, he won the game. But Judge Crane couldn't let him win that way; something besides the logic wasn't in his favor. So the tall, rugged old man looked over the handsome, dapper young man—now obviously rather drunk—and remarked:

"I'm not losing any sleep over two million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars these days, Hilton. If you'd come to me like a white man and confessed, I'd have let you off anyway. I'd have done it for your wife's sake and for the sake of the firm, if not for yours. I couldn't very well ruin my brother-in-law. If you hadn't been a crook yourself you'd have known that I play a different kind of game. I'd have let you off anyway."

Even through the alcoholic conflagration, that shot went home. For a moment Hilton knew it was true and that he had been a dog gratuitously. But the smoke of the conflagration prevented him from seeing clearly for more than a moment.

"Well, what are you grumbling about, then?" he jeered. "If you're ready to wipe the slate, go ahead and do it and there's nothing more to be said. I'm satisfied if you are. Here's the receipt. Just sign it and the thing's all over with."

He took a blank envelope from his breast pocket and from it extracted a folded slip of paper which he tossed across the table, repeating, "Just sign it and the thing's all over with."

Judge Crane unfolded the slip and a glance saw it was a formal receipt to Pennell, Hilton & Company for two million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars of Alpha Oil debentures. "And what then?" he asked.

"What do you mean?" Hilton replied.

"I sign this receipt," said the judge. "That squares the debenture account. What do you expect to do then? Do you expect me to go ahead doing business with you the same as before?"

That was a question that Hilton had wished to keep in the background. But since the judge ruthlessly dragged it out, he could only answer:

"Why, you can do as you please about that. If you don't want to do business with me you don't have to."

He was much more than half drunk, with all the optimism which usually accompanies that condition, yet this line of conversation made him uneasy.

"But you might want me to do business with you," Judge Crane persisted. "After blackmailing me into signing this receipt, you might decide to blackmail me again."

In his inebriate optimism Hilton had, in fact, been looking beyond the mere signing of the receipt. That act would cancel the past and leave him nothing for the future. He had supposed that Judge Crane, in his anxiety to hush up the scandal, would let the future take care of himself—a timid man misjudging a bold one.

"If I sign this receipt," the judge asked, "I have no further hold on you, but you've still got a hold on me. I don't like it that way."

"You can take my word for it," Hilton suggested.

Just by way of coolly stating a fact which ought to be self evident, Judge Crane replied, "Your word ain't worth a damn with me, Hilton."

Reddening more, Hilton flared back, "All right then; I'll go to the coroner—right now!"

Judge Crane coolly measured him for a moment. He would not have been afraid of Hilton sober, because going to the coroner meant ruin to Hilton, too. But it was not so easy to tell what an unstable, ill-balanced man who was already more than half drunk might do. He thought it rather likely that Hilton, if left to himself, would be completely drunk by dinner time.

"It needs some thinking over," he said reasonably. "I'm ready enough to sign the receipt, but I want to know where I stand. When I'm dealing with a gentleman who tells me he's stolen two million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars I ought to be entitled to say whether I'll take the wallop in the neck or in the belly. You spoke of Cordwainer. I don't remember the woman's name. What was it?"

"Her name is Jenny George," said Hilton with his truculent air, not catching the relevance of the question.

"Make a note of that, Dan," said the judge to his son. Then to Hilton, "She must know the story, too. Not much use my paying you a couple of million dollars for it if she may bob up tomorrow and demand a million from me. I want to know where I stand in that regard. You say she's working for Cordwainer, but I'd like some corroborative evidence of it. I know Cordwainer and have some confidence in him. If he says this woman is working for him and he'll vouch for her, that's one thing. I want to call him up and hear what he has to say on that point. That's reasonable enough, ain't it?"

It was so reasonable that Hilton could only retort, "Go ahead, call him up!"

"It will take a little time," the judge reminded him; "maybe an hour or two on Saturday afternoon when he's apt to be away from the office. Then I want to know what security I can take from you so's to be reasonably sure that when I sign this receipt that will end it. A little time will do your case no hurt. I'm ready enough to sign your receipt, Hilton; but I want to know where I stand. I'll call up Cordwainer and talk it over with Dan, and then I'll send for you or come and find you. You can make yourself comfortable around the house somewhere."

As it was the master of the house who was speaking Hilton knew not how to refuse that request to leave the room for the present. Scowling, he muttered:

"Very well; if that suits you better. I will be waiting for you" and so took himself from the room.

He was angry about it, with an exasperated feeling that, whereas he had meant to dictate, these insolent Cranes had somehow taken the direction of the affair out of his hands and were coolly shunting him off to one side while they deliberated. He hadn't meant that there should be anything left for them to deliberate upon. And the moment he was out of their masterful presence, he reacted to the rebuff by flaming up defiantly. He resolved that he would give them just one hour and then bring them to book; just one hour! He drew out his watch and marked time, frowning fiercely. Just one hour! So hotly resolving, he made his way to the sideboard in the dining room.

Meanwhile, as soon as the door closed on Hilton, Judge Crane took up the affair with his son, asking:

"How did you come to know about this, Dan—the burial up there at Stony Cove and so on?"

It was naturally a rather embarrassing question. "As I told you, father," he replied, "I acted for Peggy. She'd heard something about the disappearance of this maid, Katey. It seems a relative of the furnace man named Sam Thorp peeked in and saw her lying in the laundry. He thought she'd been drinking or had been drugged. Peggy came to me with her trouble. My idea was that Ted had taken the girl somewhere. Peggy proposed to find out what had become of her. She came to me—asked me to help her. I told her she'd best let it alone, but as she insisted, I telephoned to Cordwainer."

"Cordwainer!" the judge repeated, with surprise. "Not this same woman—what's her name?"

"No," Danforth replied. "Cordwainer sent me a man on whom he said I could depend." He smiled a little, grimly, adding, "Seems Hilton must have gone to Cordwainer and Cordwainer sent him a woman—all fish for Cordwainer's net."

"I see," the judge commented. "Well, I have considerable faith in Cordwainer. He can't afford to blackmail. . . . This man of yours—is he around here now?"

"Yes," Danforth replied.

The judge pondered it, rubbing his chin, and observed, "It's a situation where we've got to trust somebody and I suppose we may as well take a chance on Cordwainer's man as on anybody else. You see, I wasn't as smart as I thought I was, Dan. You know and Hilton knows and these two Cordwainer people know and Lord knows how many besides. It's getting out. It's getting out. . . ."

He pondered a moment more, and went on in a somewhat lower key, looking over at his son:

"It won't do, Dan. We're getting in too deep water. You see, as Hilton said, the whole thing hinges on that body up at Stony Cove. If anybody gets that, we're busted. I'm going to have that body removed. I want it done tonight. They can tow it out to sea and sink it."

That suggestion struck Danforth disagreeably; but he made no comment.

"The body's got to be put out of the way," Judge Crane repeated. "It's too dangerous now. I've found out that when danger stares you in the face the best tactics is to hit it on the nose. There's no trusting that fool Hilton. He's drunk now and he's apt to be drunk again tomorrow. Even if he meant to keep his mouth shut there's no telling when he might blab. I've got to protect my wife. I've got to protect Bradford McKeon. I've got to protect myself, too." With a faint grin he added, "I'm pretty good at that."

He frowned over it a moment and went on with Teele in a better humor than he had ever seen him, Fenwick found it hard to begin.

Shifting his point of view, he asked himself if this hesitancy was due to,any question he might have about Teele. It was not. Teele at bottom was sound. Fenwick had known that from the start, but had been in any doubt he would have been reassured by the interest Nance so openly took in him. To stand in favor before those clear, steady eyes a man must needs be sound to the core. So must he be to stand the test of France as Teele had stood it.

Fenwick rose abruptly.

"Teele," he began, "I want to talk to you tonight as your manager."

"Shoot," nodded Teele good naturedly.

"I'm afraid I've been losing sight of my job. It's darned easy with life running as smoothly as it does here."

"I'm satisfied," answered Teele. "You pulled me out of a mighty ugly rut, Fen. I don't know how I'm ever going to pay you for that, but—you aren't going to quit now?"

An expression half of fear and half of anxiety crept into Teele's eyes.

"I've put you back into condition, that's all," went on Fenwick. "We've got the old plant cleaned up and repaired, but that's a detail."

"You've done more than that—a whole lot more than that," replied Teele. "I haven't said much because—it's a hard sort of thing to talk about. But I'm beginning to see through your eyes a little. That makes me feel one moment like a cussed whimpering fool, but the next—well, this afternoon I got a hunch I'd turned the corner. It was almost as though I was standing in front of a door—a closed door ready to open. Sounds like bunk when you put it into words."

Fenwick drew a sharp breath.

"I know what you mean."

"You've felt like that?"

"Yes," answered Fenwick with a smile. "Just like that. And when you get that kind of a hunch you want to follow it to the end."

"That's what you did?"

"To the end. Only I did not have very far to go."

"The door opened?"

"A little way. But, look here, Teele, my business isn't with myself; it's with you. Nance said she'd come over to the club tomorrow afternoon."

"Fine! She'll probably bring Miss Mathews with her and we'll have a set of doubles."

"Teele—do you realize what an asset you have in that girl—in the privilege your position gives you?"

"Eh?"

"I'm looking at this impersonally—merely as your manager. But you'll be missing the biggest opportunity of your life if you don't make the most of this chance. She's the one element who can give you an objective—something worth fighting for. And that's what you need, Teele. A man can't do much by himself because by himself he isn't worth much. But with her——"

Fenwick paused as Teele rose to his feet.

"You got that hunch, too?" exclaimed Teele.

"That's too small a word for what I mean," answered Fenwick. "But tomorrow—good Lord, man, open your eyes and see. She's waiting on the threshold—the door wide open!"

"The door wide open," repeated Teele in awe. Then, searching Fenwick's eyes:

"How the devil do you know?"

Fenwick turned away quickly.

"That isn't important," he answered. "I'm off to bed. I'm tired."

But as it turned out, Fenwick was something more than tired. He awoke the next morning with a high fever and a stabbing pain in his lungs. For the next two weeks he had his hands full in a crude, elemental fight for life. But he did fight—digging in with his finger nails every time he found himself slipping, until with each rally Dr. Sennott and the nurse felt like clapping their hands in sheer admiration for the pluck of the man. And Teele, sitting by his side with strained lips, came out of each struggle almost as exhausted as Fenwick, but confident.

"He'll get back, I tell you," he used to exclaim as Sennott frowned his fears. "He'll get back. If they couldn't kill him in France, they can't here."

At least three times Fenwick found himself flying low over the lines of an enemy more merciless than anything in Flanders; found himself in the midst of an even more vicious shrapnel than any made of steel—shrapnel that pierced his lungs until he felt all shot to pieces. Yet each time, no matter how badly crippled his poor old engine of a heart was, he managed to volplane back. And every time he recovered enough to be able to see anything, he found near his bed a vase of long stemmed red roses. They were like the ground signal at base and told him he was home. Always they were fresh and dewy and though he never spoke of this to any one he had a notion that if he did not see them he would know he was dead. But he always saw them and little by little discovered that he was able to see them for longer periods, until finally they stayed right there all day long.

It was not until then that Fenwick began to think very much and his thoughts were not very flattering. He had made a good deal of a nuisance of himself here by getting sick, that was certain. That both Teele senior and Teele junior protested against this point of view did not alter facts. Also he had wasted a couple weeks of valuable life with every prospect of wasting several more if Dr. Sennott had his way. And apparently Sennott intended to have his way, because he kept a trained nurse in the room all day and night, except when Teele substituted.

Teele was generous with his time—too generous for one who had in hand a matter affecting his whole future. Fenwick realized this and tried once or twice, as his manager, to speak to him about it. But Teele flatly refused to talk business.

"Doctor's orders," he cut him off. "However, if it will help you to rest better, Fen, I will say that the old plant is running full time and it looks now as though I'd be able to pay off 100 cents on the dollar—just as soon as you get on those old feet of yours."

"Then Nance——"

"She's worried a whole lot more about you than she had any right to do," grinned Teele.

"I'm sorry," answered Fenwick. "You tell her I'm fit as a fiddle again, will you?"

"I won't until you are," Teele refused.

Which at last gave Fenwick some real motive for taking orders and lying around the house like a true idle son of the idle rich. But at that he fretted a good deal—fretted in face of the fact that he had at his command here everything he could possibly have had had he been a real millionaire. Almost every thought was anticipated and the markets of the world searched to find delicacies to please his palate. And all about him were the choice things he had always craved but which had seemed so beyond his reach. And a quick eyed nurse refused to allow him to stir without assistance and had at her beck for his sole enjoyment a staff of other servants, including Teele Sr. himself. Nor is that counting the long stemmed red roses—always fresh—which filled his room with the fragrance of spring.

Yet he fretted. He ought to be out looking for a job. His lungs were sound enough at the end of another week, but he could not get air enough in here. There were times, late at night, when if he had thought he stood the ghost of a chance of escaping that he would have put on his clothes and stolen back into the park. He wanted to get up among the stars once more—up in the deep purple where a man was free. Yet he was half afraid he would find something missing there.

His work here was done. That was one fact which made a difference. His little experiment had, apparently, been a success. A man had only to look at Teele to know this; had only to look at Teele Sr., for that matter. If ever two men appeared solvent it was they. And ten times more. T. had dropped some remark a few days ago about going to work in his father's office as soon as Fenwick was up, but refused to talk much about it. It was uncanny the way he refused to talk about anything but commonplaces when there was so much he wished to hear about. There was Nance—but perhaps Teele was right in refusing to discuss her. Fenwick had learned that it was wise not to talk about her to himself. Yet when he did not it was as though the bottom had dropped out of the world. It was as though some one had sneaked in and made off with those roses. It left him without any signal at base. In that plight all a man could do was to circle about and about aimlessly as long as his petrol lasted. Then come down at random—to God knows where.

Fenwick saw black sometimes. Which was another reason why he felt he must get out of here. This was no place for a man in such a mood. He should be by himself. And this was why he began to read the want ads in the daily papers and clip all those which looked promising. But the trouble with most of them was that they called for a personal interview and the lynx eyed nurse refused to tell him where his clothes were. That in the face of the evidence she had that he was perfectly well able to walk five times the length of the room and back without wobbling more than twice. He showed her.

"You'll have to speak to Mr. Teele or Dr. Sennott about it," she informed him.

"Hang it all, I'm not a prisoner here am I?"

"You'll have to speak——"

"Bah," he cut in.

But when at the end of another week she found him poking around in closets she made no comment to him, but spoke to Teele herself.

"I think he is planning to go out," she said.

"The devil you say," exclaimed Teele.

He went up the stairs two at a time, though there was really no occasion for hurry, because Fenwick had not been able to find anything but his hat, and even he appreciated the fact that it would do him little good to apply for a position in that and a silk dressing gown.

"What in thunder you think you're doing?" demanded Teele.

Fenwick, at bay, asserted himself.

"I want my clothes," he declared.

"You won't get them," replied Teele.

"But look here, I must get out. I've got to get a job."

"You have, have you? Well, when the time comes I'll attend to that."

"You?"

"Yes, I. Sit down. You aren't any too steady yet."

Fenwick, helpless, obeyed.

"Now," went on Teele, "I want you to listen. Your contract with me has expired. I put myself in your hands for a month and the month was over several weeks ago."

"That's it," broke in Fenwick. "I'm through and so——"

"You're through with me, but I'm not through with you. Fen, you're the best little manager who ever strolled into New York—for every one except yourself. You did a good job for me—a job that can't be paid for in money, only in kind. So for this next month you're under my orders. You're a pretty tough looking business proposition at present, but I have a hunch I can put you on your feet."

"I'm all right, I tell you," insisted Fenwick.

"You're a darned old bankrupt, that's what you are. You've bungled your own affairs because you've been too close, but Lord—what a chance you have!"

Fenwick raised his tired eyes. They rested for a moment on the eager, flushed face of the other—a face which reflected, as in a mirror, something of the dawnlike freshness of roses, something of the challenging self-confidence of that picture which hung in his room, but most of all something deeper which must have come from her living presence.

"T.," he said slowly. "My chance was only a dream and must stay a dream."

Teele had his man out in a few days for a short motor ride and, finding that he stood that easily, ventured on the following day the longer trip to the country club.

"Nance and her mother have asked us to tea," explained Teele when they were nearing the ground, in as offhand a manner as though this were an every day occurrence. "Miss Mathews will be here, too."

Fenwick sat up with a jerk.

"Why didn't you tell me before we started?" he demanded.

"Why?"

"Hang it, I've no business out here any more."

"You haven't?"

"You know I haven't."

"I know you were nominated, seconded, and duly elected a member."

"But, man, I can't afford——"

"I paid your dues out of your receiver's commission. If you aren't a cussed fool you'll find it one of the neatest little investments you ever made."

Fenwick had plenty more to say on the subject, but before he had an opportunity the car had come to a stop before the rambling old colonial house and he found himself being assisted out by a long stemmed Jacquemine rose. Certainly that was his first impression as with a firm hand, her cheeks a deep red, her tender mouth smiling a welcome, Nance took his arm when he stepped from the running board. And that touch, felt through the big fur coat of Teele's that he was wearing, braced him like wine.

"It's good to see you out again," she was saying in her low, sincere voice. "Come. You mustn't stand out here in the cold air."

Which is exactly what he would have done had he his choice. He would have remained here indefinitely, where he had plenty of

The Teenie Weenies.

(Synopsis of last week's story: Four Teenie Weenies, having been accidentally locked in a woman's pocketbook, are carried down to the city, where they make their escape in a department store. The Teenie Weenies are helped out of the store on to the roof of a shed where a pigeon brings the little fellows food.)

FORTUNATELY it was not a cold day, and by sitting in a spot of sunshine that fell on the roof the little fellows kept comfortable.

Once some one threw a date seed on to the roof from one of the windows above the four Teenie Weenies, and it almost hit the Dunce, scaring that little chap half out of his wits as it bounded over his head.

"I wish that pigeon would come back," yawned Gogo. "We all is losin' time sittin' heah."

"Well, we might as well sit here until we find out in which direction the shoe house lies," said the Sailor. "If we should start out we'd have to ask questions to find out which way to go, and that would take up a lot of time."

"If we'd been able to peep out of that pocketbook once in a while as we came along we might have been able to find our way back," said the Clown. "I hope my next trip won't be in a pocketbook."

The four Teenie Weenies heard the flap of wings, and the next minute their friend, the pigeon, landed on the edge of the roof.

"Excuse me for being so long," cried the pigeon, in plain pigeon English. "I had a most terrible time finding out what direction your home is from here. I couldn't find my friend the carrier pigeon so I asked a couple of sparrows, and one of them told me he had heard a dog speak of the Teenie Weenies once, so I flew over to see the dog, but he wasn't around and I waited almost an hour before he showed up.

"He had a bone with him and I couldn't get a word out of him until he had eaten his bone. Dogs are awfully grouchy when they're eating a bone and I've found out it's best to leave them alone until they finish it.

"I asked the dog if he could tell me where your house was, and he said that he could, so I'll take you over to see him, and you can get the direction from him."

The pigeon was such a large powerful bird that all four of the Teenie Weenies were able to climb on to his back, and in a few minutes the bird settled on to the ground behind the back door of a small store where the dog lived.

"Mr. Pigeon tells us that you might be able to tell us where our house is," said the Sailor when the four Teenie Weenies had slipped off the pigeon's back.

"Well," barked the dog, for he was rather gruff like most dogs, "I can tell you the general direction. I had a cousin, a silly pug dog, that lived near your house once, and he used to talk about you Teenie Weenies. He was always gettin' lost, had a poor sense of smell, and I used to take him part way home once in a while. I used to take him to the river and it seems that the river runs pretty close to his house so he could always get home by following the river."

"There is a river not far from our house," said the Dunce. "How do you get to the river?"

"Follow this street straight out," said the dog, nodding his head towards the street which ran in front of the store. "Keep on going until you smell a sort of fishy smell, then follow the smell until you reach the river. Don't turn away from the street before you come to river, for there's a fish store on another street and if you should smell that you'd get off the trail. When you reach the river sniff up and down the bank until you smell leather. There's a leather tannery down the river about half a mile from the spot where you strike the river, and that's the direction you want. Keep on down the river until you reach the tannery, and I think your house is about eight miles beyond."

"Thank you very much," said the four Teenie Weenies making a beautiful bow, and making their way towards the street they lay in hiding under a box until night, for it was quite too crowded to travel the street with safety in the day time.

"That's goin' to be a powerful long walk after we all reach the river," said Gogo, who was troubled with tender feet. "Eight miles is a long ways off."

"J-j-j-jimminie w-w-whillikers!" exclaimed the Dunce. "I have an idea. We can build a raft, and float down the river."

This scheme made a long trip look short to the little men, and when they had eaten the peanuts, which the pigeon had given them, and when the street became quiet, the four little chaps set out towards the river.

After a long tramp they finally came to the river, and immediately they set out to find material for the raft.

Soon they found a piece of board which would do nicely for the raft and it took the little chaps almost until morning to get the board into the water and floated under the dock, where they could work unseen during the day.

"Now we all got to have a house on the raft," suggested Gogo when the board was safely anchored under the dock. "It gets mighty powerful cold these days, and we got to have some place to keep warm."

"Of course, we've got to have a shelter on the raft," said the Sailor, and after the little men had eaten a bite of peanut for their breakfast and taken a short nap they set to work looking for something that would serve as a house on the raft.

After a long search the Teenie Weenies chose an old tin can which they rolled on to the raft and, having no tools, they were forced to hold the can in place with wires which they found on a dump near by.

Next the little men made a couple of long paddles and carried some dry shavings and leaves to the raft, which they piled into the can for a bed.

The Clown found an old rag, which they ripped up into small squares for bed clothes, and when all was ready the Teenie Weenies pushed the raft into the water, and floated out into the river.

OVERLOOK HOUSE

by Will Payne

He hadn't meant that there should be anything left for them to deliberate upon.

THE STORY TO THE FAR—Overlook House is the home of Judge Timothy Crane, a wealthy owner of oil lands, and his young wife. As the story opens the Cranes are entertaining as their guest Mrs. Edith Hilton, whose husband, a broker, has been handling the Judge's financial interests. One day Hilton summons his wife to a secret meeting at a nearby town, confesses that he has been misappropriating the Crane securities, and begs her to help him conceal his guilt. To avoid recognition on her trip, Mrs. Hilton has worn the hat and cloak of Katey Zobrosky, a pretty Polish housemaid. On her way back she is overtaken by Ted Pennell, son of her husband's partner, who gives her a lift in his car, promising secrecy and treating the little masquerade as a joke. Several persons, however, have seen the supposed maid in his car, among them Peggy Loughman, Ted's fiancée, who has been angered before by young Pennell's open philandering with the girl. There is a lover's quarrel and then matters take a more serious turn, for Katey, the maid, has disappeared. The first to admit any knowledge of her whereabouts is Samuel Thorp, a town loafer, who has seen the girl lying on a pile of clothes in the laundry, covered with a coat which he recognizes as one belonging to Ted Pennell. Thorp confides his secret to Louis, the sardener, an admirer of Katey, and Louis, in turn, tells the disturbing story to Danforth Crane, the Judge's son, who is in love with Peggy Loughman and proposes, if he can, to overcome her preference for Ted Pennell. Ted, feeling himself bound not to betray Mrs. Hilton, refuses stubbornly to explain Katey's supposed presence in his car just before her disappearance, and adds to the mystery of his conduct by abruptly leaving Overlook House. Peggy Loughman, deeply troubled, determines to find out what has become of the maid, and at her suggestion Danforth Crane engages a detective named Eastman to work on the case. At the same time a second detective, a woman, is retained by Lester Hilton, the broker, who has his own reasons for wanting to get Ted Pennell more deeply into trouble. The detectives, both employees of a man named Cordwainer, work together in order to play one client against the other, and find that Dr. Bradford McKeon, the Crane family physician, has authorized the burial of a girl whom he identifies as Mina Stein, a maid in his house. The body is exhumed secretly and proves to be that of the missing Katey. The next day evidence of Hilton's peculations falls into his partner's hands and the embezzler, desperately playing for time, offers to get a receipt for the missing securities, duly signed by one of the Cranes. Then his detective tells him what she has learned about Katey and the Crane physician's part in the affair. Armed with this knowledge, Hilton tries to blackmail Danforth Crane into signing the receipt, but Danforth defies him. Meanwhile Danforth has been questioning Dr. McKeon. The physician refuses to talk, but promptly reports to Judge Crane that his son "knows something," and the Judge calls Danforth into conference.

THIRTEENTH INSTALLMENT.

A Battle of Wits.

JUDGE CRANE led the way into his study on the second floor, closing the door behind himself and his son, and when they were seated he surveyed the son for a moment, his own face settled in a grim mask, the corners of the mouth pulled down.

"Dan, you and I have gone along together a good while," he began, with deliberation. "I thought we were good friends."

"I hope we are, father," Danforth replied, with an inward wince.

"You don't act like it," the judge went on, without visible heat. "You've been to McKeon asking questions about that girl—the maid."

Danforth then understood what his father wished to talk to him about, and answered, "Yes, I did go to McKeon."

The judge pressed deliberately on, in the manner of a professional cross-examiner: "You must have known it was my affair. You must have known that McKeon wouldn't have taken a hand in it except for me."

"Why, no; I didn't know that, father," said Danforth. "I went to McKeon to find that out."

"You suspected it, then."

"Well, it seemed probable that he had acted for you. I wanted to find that out," Danforth replied.

"If you even suspected that it was my affair, why didn't you come to me—if you had to go to anybody at all? I don't interfere in your affairs, do I?"

"No," Danforth admitted.

"Whatever happened," the judge went on, "happened in my house—with my doctor. I should say that on the face of it, it was my affair. But you didn't come to me. You went behind my back. That's why I am talking to you, Dan. It looks to me as though you were trying to get something on me. Naturally I want to know where I stand. If you're shooting at me from behind the hedge, what's up? What are you after? I thought I'd played fair with you—given you your share or a little better—let you have your head as much as you pleased and backed you the best I knew how. What's up?"

Stated in that way the son's action did look mean and the son couldn't deny that the statement was a fair one.

"Why, it was my affair, too," he said, and paused. . . . How to explain rationally the various steps by which he came into the affair? He deliberated over it a moment, then looked his father squarely in the face and cut through at a stroke to the heart of the matter:

"I love Peggy Loughman, father."

Such a confession might well be made by a son fifteen years younger than this one, to a mother in one of those intimate moments which run back to the time when the son sat on the mother's knee. Passing between these two adult males, toughened by many a tussle with the world—the confessor being thirty-six and ponderous, with a name of power—it had a rather electrical effect.

"Of course I've known her since she was a baby," Danforth went on. "She used to sit on my knee. . . . The little witch always got close to my heart. It didn't occur to either of us that I would ever be anything more than a big brother." He was looking steadily at the judge, but dreaming back to it.

"About two years ago, when she was 18, it changed in a month. I wanted to marry her. I felt that she was too young then—it would hardly be decent. I think I could have married her if Ted Pennell hadn't come along. It seemed all up with me then. All the same she wouldn't let me sleep. . ." Looking at the judge and dreaming back, Danforth gave a little sigh.

"Probably you've forgotten about it, father; or maybe you never felt it. When a man as old and hard as I am gets hit that way there's plenty of fuel to burn. It's true I'd never paid much attention to women. I've played around with some of 'em and been fond of some of 'em; but it never counted for much more than amusement. She's got me all over. I've never begun to want anything else as much as I want her. I don't care a damn for Ted Pennell. He don't deserve one of her old shoes. If he's fool enough and puppy enough to queer his own game over a little doll of a housemaid and so throw Peggy away I'm entitled to that advantage. Let him get out. I'll be mighty good to Peggy if she marries me."

Judge Crane, in a very considerable astonishment, struck his fingers through his stubborn hair and muttered, "I hadn't thought of this."

"Well, naturally you wouldn't," Danforth replied. "I'm telling you because I want you to know it was my affair. You see, Peggy herself got anxious about that business of the missing maid. Some things came to her notice that disturbed her a lot. She came to me with her trouble. She does come to me, father. There's no reason why she shouldn't come to stay when this business is settled. I undertook to find out what had happened because she asked me to. I found out about a girl being buried on the strength of a death certificate issued by Dr. McKeon and I went to him."

Danforth knew well enough that this was not an exactly candid statement, yet who could point out just where it deviated from exact truth?

"It was my affair because Peggy herself asked me to find out. I thought it likely enough that you were shielding Pennell on mamma's account. But when shielding him meant handing Peggy over to him and he had no right to her and I loved her myself I thought I was justified in what I did."

More quickly than he had spoken before and frowning, the judge asked, "How much does she know about it, Dan? Peggy? What does she know about it?"

Danforth reflected a moment and replied, "She knows that Benjamin says Katey telephoned about three o'clock that she wasn't coming back and that she was seen lying insensible in the laundry about five o'clock, and next morning Dr. McKeon bought a coffin, saying it was for a maid in his house—although he never had a maid of the name he gave—and that he signed a death certificate for this fictitious maid of his and she was buried at Stony Cove that afternoon. Peggy doesn't know positively that the girl who was buried up there is Katey, but she knows that it looks mightily that way. I could have told her positively that the girl was Katey, but she went away, you know—down to the Cotters."

Judge Crane's face puckered; he struck his hand through his hair again, and said with anxiety, "Dan, I'm afraid we've spilled the beans—both of us. I'm afraid something rotten has happened. . . . I like that Peggy girl mighty well myself. She's sort of my girl. When Ben Loughman died I proposed to do just as well, according to the different circumstances, by his wife and little girl as he could have done himself if he'd lived. I liked Ben Loughman better than any man I ever met in my life. I liked Judy and the girl, too. You see, she's sort of been my girl. I warned her as well as I could about Ted Pennell . . ."

The judge stared very gravely at his son a moment and lowered his voice a bit: "Ted killed that girl Katey in his bedroom—shot her."

There was no surprise in that statement to Danforth, yet hearing his father affirm it gave it finality. Having affirmed that, the judge took up his problem again, frowning over it.

"From start to finish there's been just one thing in my mind about this business—one big thing that everything else has got to give way to—and that's my wife. You know mamma ain't been very well lately, even for her. I know McKeon don't like the situation and I don't like it. . . . I've had a job to do ever since she cracked her heart lugging that damned box, son. You say I don't know how you feel about Peggy and probably I don't, for I'm a lot older than you are. But I know mighty well that if anybody on two legs lifts a finger against mamma he's going to find a pretty lively old man on his back. She was what I thought of the first thing. Of course she loves Ted Pennell just like he was her own son. A great hullabaloo and racket—Ted taken up for murder and all that—I believed that it would kill her and I believe so now. She ain't going to be killed in any such way if I can help it.

"All I thought about, really, was to keep it still and cover it up and save her. Of course I've been pretty good to McKeon. Guess he knows I'll be better to him. I sent for him and put it up to him that he'd got to save his patient's life—got to! He knew I'd stand behind him to the limit, and it didn't look very difficult. Katey had no relatives in this country so far's we knew. Didn't seem that anybody would be inquiring particularly about a Polish maid, or questioning anything Bradford McKeon did. He agreed to undertake it and got the girl buried, as you know, and there it stands."

"I thought it was about that," Danforth commented; "and as I look at it, Ted Pennell is counted out. He threw away his chance. I don't see that he's entitled to any consideration."

"He ain't," the judge replied; "not a bit. But I don't like the looks of it, Dan; not at all." In doubt and exasperation the judge struck his hand across his hair again.

"You see, he wanted me to give him a job—send him away somewhere—a long way

SKIRT SHORTNESS! THE RACE IS WON FROM GRANDMA

by CORINNE LOWE

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

KNEE-DLESS to say, the coat shown second from the left for the belle of from 3 to 12 is quite, quite short. Of old rose velours, it is trimmed with gray squirrel. In the center a coat of old blue velours is distinguished by a cape divided in the back to show two box plaits and is trimmed with stitching. Next, a mouse color velours is collared in beaver. At the extreme left a variation upon a familiar model is found in this navy blue velvet with its guimpe of plaited buff linen. At the extreme right a brown velvet frock, embroidered in jade green, shows a vestee of plaited white pique and one of the prevalent girdles which get into action only at the sides.*

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Childhood had to do something about it, of course. When grandma began running her petties up to half mast, her grandchildren were obliged to give some indication of the difference in age. Since then it has been a mad race for supremacy of shortness in skirts. But the grandchild has finally won from her venerable competitor, not by a neck but by a knee.

Grandma's knees are still demurely draped. But for the children—no, no, no! Knees are being worn by children nowadays, and whether it be in coats or frocks the most prevalent model for the belle of from 3 to 12 is one of those half portion garments that hang from the shoulder and—doesn't have far to hang!

We borrowed this mode from our French neighbors, but we may now enter into successful competition with them for penuriousness of effect. If you are under 12 you certainly don't get served to more than a tearoom portion of material. Perhaps that is why we can afford to treat our children nowadays to the costly fabrics which we wear ourselves—to velvet and duvetyn, to crepe de chines and taffetas.

Certainly these small frocks enjoy every privilege nowadays, not only grownup materials but of grownup trimmings. Furthermore, the combinations of colors are of a surprising sophistication. We don't commit our offspring any longer to blue and red and pink. On the contrary, they roam with us such color meads as gray and mulberry, mauve and blue, brown and jade, gray and black. Verily the children's hour has come to stay for the whole day.

Illustrating the creed of the unsheltered knee is the little coat shown second from the left. This coat for the girl of from 3 to 12 is of rose velours, and it is worthy of attention not only because of the effective panels at the front but because of that little squirrel collar which imitates exactly the scarf form of the grownup's fur neckpiece.

Squirrel and beaver are both favorites for the coat of the young person, but here again the small one is not inhibited from the latest adventure in pelts. At some of the smart Fifth avenue designers one may find her duvetyn or velvet wrap cuffed and collared in agnella, the crinkly lamb's wool that has played such a part in the smart styles for grownup folks.

Second from the right is another velour coat still further proving that no young person should be seen without her knees. This coat is mouse colored velours, and it is trimmed with a beaver collar echoed by the little cap in the same material as the coat. More infantile in conception than the first model which we described, this is restricted to her between the ages of 3 and 7.

The many, many cape model coats are represented by the charming wrap of old blue duvetyn in the center of the page. This model is differentiated by the division in the back, which permits a full view of two box plaits, and by the effective stitching in black silk ending in arrowheads. Again the fur used is gray squirrel.

The kneeless frock is frequently that mere guileless slip which hangs from the shoulder without any belt. This is worn by the girl of from 3 to 12, and if she be the lucky possessor of bisque doll members, all is well. However, this model is undoubtedly a trying one for the tall, scrawny child (who in the novels always obligingly grows up to be the beautiful heroine).

As against this unbelted mode we have a number that show a waist line either normally or subnormally placed. Regarding the latter, it may be said that there is no longer such a prejudice in favor of the long waisted, short skirted dress of other days. However, one does often see the waist placed quite low, and this is particularly true of the more dressy models.

For example, I saw the other day the most delightful little party frock for the youngster, which, made of rose color crepe de chine, added a plaited skirt—avoiding, of course, the knee line—to a loosely draped bodice that was extended almost to the hips. The girdle of this frock, which, by the way, was sleeveless and low necked, was made of roses of green taffeta.

Crepe de chine has been almost as violently undertaken by the designer of children's clothes as it has been by the inventor of adult styles. These models for the afternoon party are often trimmed simply with hemstitching or faggoting, but frequently ribbons or embroidery of wool in contrasting shade are employed to give a touch of color. For, just as grandma orders her crepe de chine in neutral tone, granddaughter often lisps precociously: "I'll take mine in gray or beige."

Speaking of the gray crepe de chine for the small person, what could be more charming than the little afternoon frock I saw the other day—a smart knee running model the straight line of which was broken by the cherry ribbons placed at either side of the waist line and allowed to hang then in tiny loops? The cherry motif was sounded again in large flowers of wool embroidery encircling the hem of the minute skirt.

Wool embroidery is much liked in general by the kindly persons who are making clothes pleasant for children. It appears notably on many of the summery frocks of organdy and dotted Swiss. For example, one sees white angora flowers executed on dainty little mauve organdies and black angora motifs on the favored yellow organdy.

Laces are also much favored at present by the designer of children's clothes, and in this connection it is interesting to note that Irish is coming to the front in the juvenile world almost as indomitably as in the adult one. Many of the linens and cottons are now being treated in this way. Also Swiss embroidery is looked upon with much consideration.

For example, a child's frock of brown dotted Swiss—O, yes, indeed, the brown cotton is quite, quite the thing nowadays—is set off by insets of white organdy outlined by white Swiss embroidery.

For wear throughout this winter and the entire spring the velvet frock will not renounce the supremacy which it now holds. Never since the days when Van Dyck painted have there been so many velvet clad children. And, let it be noted, the velvet is quite often as black as Hamlet's tailor could make it. When not black it is frequently of brown.

At the extreme right we show one of the simplest and most charming of these velvet frocks, worked out in brown against which the jade green stitching about cuffs and neck line and belt appears just as successfully as during the days when Robin Hood proved the beauty of brown and green as a suit combination. The yoke and cuffs are of fine plaited white pique, and the girdle, doing duty as it does only at the sides, indicates one of the favorite ways of treating the waist line.

The navy blue velvet dress at the left of the page merely reiterates one of the most successful models which have been turned out in recent years for the girl of from 6 to 12. This consists of the jacket and guimpe combine, and many are the ways in which it is fulfilled.

One of the most stereotyped is the black velvet jacket with the shepherd's plaid skirt and the white china silk blouse. This is a selection on which no mother may go wrong in choosing proper attire for Susan's Saturday matinee or afternoon party. Yet decidedly newer is the variation offered above with its guimpe of plaited buff linen supplemented by cuffs and collar of plain buff linen.

A Complete, Exclusive Specialty Shop for Women

Newly-Created Spring Modes

A Complete Showing

WE announce a comprehensive display, beginning tomorrow, of our exclusive productions for spring. Garments of the finest and most reliable fabrics—qualities that have always been identified with Stevens apparel—present the latest, authentic style versions. The prices are lower than have prevailed for years.

Just a glimpse of our windows will give an idea of the unusual interest of our extraordinary style exhibit.

Frocks of Many Modes

REPRODUCTIONS of the French mode, as well as original interpretations of our own, are the themes of the new frocks. Developed in luxurious crepes, woolen materials or sheer fabrics, some are handsomely beaded or embroidered, while others achieve smartness in their naive simplicity. Tailleur, afternoon or evening gown exemplify the mode personal at Stevens'.

Wraps to Accompany Them

UNUSUAL colorings—Mouflon, Silver Pine, Hindustan, Sorrento, Ostrich, Carmel, Azurite, Slynx, Amalfi—make the spring wraps noteworthy. The silhouette follows the loose straight model, with set-in loose sleeves, as well as the cape and cape effect. The new materials also—Armida, Velmirage, Chamoistyne, Orlando and Marvella—with fur trimmings of Caracul and Natural Squirrel, help achieve for them an air of unusual smartness. Even the untrimmed wraps show innovations.

Le Directoire

Hats That Harmonize

SOFT and drooping gracefully, or upturned with a saucy air, the spring hats vary in size from the very large to the very small. The addition of our new section of moderately priced millinery makes possible the same variation in price. Bright flower trimmed models with bright underbrims, fabric combinations of Georgette, Braid, Silk, Raffia, Crepe de Chine and Tagle vie with the smartness of the semi-tailored ones.

Millinery Section, Fifth Floor.

Blouses Worthy of the Name

LOVELY hand made Lingerie Blouses, smartly tailored models for sports wear, luxuriously embroidered and beaded ones, imported from France, give an individual variation to our Blouse Section that is equaled only by a profusion of new spring colors.

The overblouse and tie-on style continue to hold their place in popularity, while girdles of beads or silk become more handsome.

Blouse Section, Second Floor.

Suits as Ever Indispensable

THE distinctive feature of Stevens tailleurs is their perfection of fit, assured by a finesse of workmanship that marks the highest kind of custom tailoring. A new material, Twill Cord, adds to fine tailoring the advantage of two new colorings, Wren Tan and Pewter Gray. These two colors that this season has selected for its own are a welcome addition to the perennial Navy Blue and Black that are always assured of favor.

What Is Charm?

by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

WHAT is charm? Is it a physical quality that may be cultivated as may a lovely voice, a glorious head of hair, a beautiful figure? Or is it an indefinable something allied with things spiritual? A quality that has its root in kindliness, in thoughtfulness, in genuine sweetness of character?

How closely is it related to beauty? How would you define it?

I asked the question of a number of folk who I thought might help to solve the answer of the lovely asset, and found that in many cases it was more easily defined by the qualities one should not have rather than those a charming person has.

Those Out of the Running.

"A slangy person could hardly qualify as a charming one," said one.

"An overdressed and highly rouged and artificial woman would eliminate herself from the charm school," said another.

"An unkempt, untidy person would be out of the running," said a third.

"Immediately a woman is spoken of as charming, I see in my mind's eye one who is the quintessence of femininity," said one of the other sex.

"In your maddest moments you could not call a masculine type charming."

"I think of a low, sweetly modulated voice, a quietness of manner, and a person who is not afraid to put herself out to be pleasant, who does it in a way one is not made conscious of," was a further analysis of charm.

"It is an ease and grace of manner plus a winning smile. This morning I saw an illustration of it on the car coming downtown. The unaffected but genuine 'thank you' when a man rose to give his seat to a girl. She made him feel he had received a pretty compliment totally devoid of any attempt at flirtation," was still another striving to put into words the elusive quality.

"It is not beauty. Because one of the homeliest persons I know is by far and away the most charming. But she is such a sympathetic, kindly dear, with a good word for everybody and with an ever ready helping hand for any one in distress."

"It isn't clothes. That's a sure thing," said another. "A woman can be Poiret modeled from tip to toe, and her commonness will kill her. I think it is mentality and understanding in the older woman and girlishness sans sophistication, sans rouge, sans flippancy in the young maid."

Arnold Bennett, in his essays on women, says: "I do not wish to wear out a word which everybody understands, but which nobody has successfully defined—charm. I simply mention it and point out that, besides the division of charm into physical and moral, there is a subdivision of moral charm into the charm which a woman exercises unconsciously and cannot help exercising, and the charm which she exercises consciously . . . a natural gift for soothing, for lubrication of the wheels of existence. . . . True, helplessness has charm; defenselessness has charm; particularly for the strong and overbearing.

"Men are accustomed to this charm, and professional women have assuredly shed much of it. But they were thoroughly entitled to shed it, for it should belong properly only to the young. . . . But do what they (professional women) will and leave undone what they will, they cannot lose the essential charm of their sex. And, further, they possess a moral and mental equipment of experience and knowledge, which infallibly adds to the range of their charms and which renders their attractiveness permanent.

"For example, their conversation, other things being equal, must have an interesting piquancy. They have general ideas. With them, more conversational material presents itself."

He speaks further of the lack of charm in the woman whose conversation is insipid. In her class of charm failures is the one who "hogs" the atmosphere with a never ending flow of pointless tales of personal happenings. On her departure one hears instead of "Is she not charming?" "Isn't she a deadly bore?"

Getting to the Point.

Mental indolence never inspires the complimentary phrase. A person of a pessimistic frame of mind, one who repeats unpleasant things, and a gossipy creature would never be decorated with a charm medal.

So, that, as nearly as you can boil down the numerous attempts at analysis of the thing, you have lovableness of character and a certain degree of mentality.

And these are qualities which, if not possessed, may be acquired and that without such great difficulty. The former, to be sure, is the more difficult to gain if in one's childhood the principles of thoughtfulness of others were not instilled. Respectfulness toward an older person, which is but a branch of thoughtfulness, will create the impression of charm in an observer.

As a simple instance: In a crowded bus recently an elderly woman addressed a little girl occupying a seat with a request that she let her sit down and she would hold the youngster on her lap. The small child shook her head and clung to the seat with no word of command from her mother seated next her to arise. Now you could not in a most indulgent mood say that either child or mother was charming.

But when a child does act on impulse to a kindly act there flits across your mental register: "A charming child, isn't she?"

Here's the Formula.

The formula is made up of the same ingredients of kindliness and thoughtfulness of others for grownups.

The mentality is simply exercising the brain on every possible occasion, acquiring new interests, and thereby getting away from the petty irritations of life, which, by the way, is the best recipe known for keeping young.

In either case, not hard medicine to swallow, if corrective measures are necessary—

And is it not the nicest compliment of all to be described as charming?

D. H.: YOU HAVE TO DRINK milk, take cereals buried in cream, spread butter generously over bread and in other foods. Drink malted milk, chocolate, and cocoa instead of coffee and tea. Get just enough exercise to work up a good appetite. But I can tell you all this in more detailed form if you will send s. a. e., as space here is limited.

LOVE LETTERS

How does a love letter contest appeal to you? Don't you love to read them? Don't you love to receive them? Can you write a good one yourself? The Tribune is going to pay $5 for every love letter published. So, if you can write a good one, or if you have one in your private or family possession you would like to enter in the contest, send it to Doris Blake, Chicago Tribune. As no letters will be returned, send copies of the ones you wish to retain possession of.

SEEING A VISION OF LOVE.

DEAR Little Sweetheart: I am stopping tonight in a small, dismal room of a cheap hotel. The yellow, flickering gas light by which I am trying to write throws weird shadows on the walls, and the only sounds are the occasional steps of a fellow guest in the hallway or the distant rumble of an owl car.

Yet, dearest, I am in the midst of a host of memories and thoughts of you, as innumerable and sweet as an army of fairies. As my pen falters and I gaze at the blank wall in front of me, it seems a canvas on which is painted your mountain home. I see the green of the Cumberlands, the low-roofed cottage with its cool, wide porch, the yellow road winding gracefully past the open gate, the stream flashing in the evening sunlight, and you in the shaded rustic seat where we have so often and so lovingly planned our future. You seem to be looking far away and I wonder if you, too, are seeing a vision of love and a cottage and me.

As memory and fancy paint this picture I am more content to wait until I can take you in my arms and tell you of the love that shall be yours to the end; how your love with its sweetness and purity has given me inspiration for my work here, and how I hurried back to you the moment it was finished.

Until then I can only love you truly, earnestly try to be worthy of you, and hope that I am still

Your own LADDIE.

MY MOST EMBARRASSING MOMENT

The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published on "The Most Embarrassing Moment of My Life." Address Embarrassing Moments, The Tribune, Chicago. Please write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Described in Full.

I called on a girl friend and said I had almost died laughing when I heard another friend had sent her picture to a beauty contest.

"Just think," I said, "of Anna Marie's pug nose and awful chin, and imagine what the judges will say when they see her face."

Lo and behold, out stepped Anna Marie from behind a screen. She hid when she saw me coming and did not dream she was going to make me experience my most embarrassing moment. A. M.

While the Captain Looked On.

It was during the war when I was in Washington, D. C., that I met a young man, a mathematical genius. He often became oblivious of his immediate surroundings, much to the embarrassment of those with him. We used to go canoeing frequently on the Potomac, taking cooking utensils and provisions. One evening we returned from our trip rather late, and in order to take a short cut we had to pass near the Ellipse just back of the White House. Guards were pacing up and down. It was absolutely forbidden to loiter a moment when passing through. We must have looked like regular tramps, and when half way through the grounds my friend, who had been carrying the basket of our cooking utensils, became absentminded and dropped it. Coffee pots, plates, and steak broilers rolled on the grass. A guard came up and said: "Move on, buddy." It took some time to pick up everything and several other guards had assembled by that time. Just then I looked up and a captain from my division—with whom I had had several engagements—walked slowly past us, looking on with an amused gaze. I don't believe that I ever felt more foolish in my life. M. W.

The Height of Fashion.

Grandma Graham reports that her most embarrassing moment was when, returning with her basket from market, she hastened to tell an up to date flapper on the boulevard that she had forgotten to fasten her overshoes. "Glory be—the world is upside down," she remarked, when told it was the latest style. C. P.

REAL LOVE STORIES

THE WIDOW'S PLEA.

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the idea that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. The Tribune will pay $5 for every story published. No manuscripts returned. Address Doris Blake, The Tribune, Chicago.

ONCE upon a time, in a certain great newspaper, there was a corner which lent a helping hand to those in need. To mothers with little babies it sent clothes; to cripples it supplied cheer and entertainment; to aspiring youth it gave books and tools.

One day a poor widow, suddenly bereft by the dread "flu," of all she had, applied to this invisible friend for aid. And that power that some of us call fate sent a lonely man to her assistance. He, too, had lost all he held most dear in the ravages of the same disease. But it had left him the wherewithal to help others who had suffered.

He saw the widow's plea. Instead of sending aid through the paper, he decided to go himself to see if he might not be of even greater help. Which is where that mistress of all of us that others call destiny smiled a satisfied smile and sat back to watch what would happen.

It wasn't long before these two people who had been sad and lonely found in each other the comfort and help that each needed. Out of the ashes of their suffering there was to grow a new love and a new faith. And before long the wise quiet goddess who had smiled so contentedly laughed a faint, tinkling laugh that sounded like silvery wedding bells. And sighed a happy little sigh that was as delicate as new hope in two tried hearts. And turned regretfully to new tasks. E. S.

9896—Woman's dress. Sizes 36 to 42 inches, bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅛ yards of 54 inch plain material, with ¼ yard of 24 inch for collar and 1⅛ yards of 54 inch plaid material.

9888—Child's one piece dress. Sizes ½, 1 to 6 years. Size 4 requires 2 yards of 36 inch material, with 3¼ yards of ribbon.

9886—Woman's one piece apron. Sizes 36, 40, 44, and 48 inches, bust measure. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 36 inch material, with ¾ yard of 24 inch contrasting and 4¼ yards of binding.

How to Use the Patterns

TWO materials will make up well in pattern No. 9896, and one has quite a choice, too. Foulard and garbardine, taffeta, and any one of the beautiful lightweight woolens, satin, and georgette, and so on. Blue and tans combine well, green and blacks; one could go on almost indefinitely. The choice of colors depends largely on what is most becoming, and the materials are governed by the uses to which the dress is to be put. A stunning plaid for the skirt and a plain taffeta or satin for the blouse would be smart looking.

The skirt is a one piece, gathered model and will not present any difficulties. It will need no trimming but a deep hem or facing at the bottom.

The blouse is cut—sleeves, back, and fronts—all in one piece. The front is slashed through the center from the neck to a certain perforation, and this opening is bound or faced. The under arm seams should be reinforced where the greatest curve comes, so as to prevent tearing. Do some embroidering on the waist, unless the material itself is figured in some way.

The belt can be of patent leather if the plaid and plain woolen are used; and of ribbon or the dress material if something more dressy is chosen.

For a small child No. 9888 should be made of sheer cambric or linen, with but little in the way of decoration, the beauty of these small dresses being in the beauty of the materials and the perfection of the work. Some small forget-me-not sprays would be beautiful embroidered on the front at a yoke depth.

In finishing the placket in the back lay a hem down both sides, making the hem for the button side a trifle more narrow than for the buttonhole hem. Lay them straight from top to bottom, fold the one over the other at the end of the opening, and backstitch across by hand, using as small even stitches as possible.

It may not come amiss right here to say a word about getting ready to sew. Sewing may be made a pleasant occupation if you have all that is necessary at hand. For instance, have plenty of thread, needles, linings, tape, braid, hooks, eyes, and snaps, buttons, a good tape measure—one having the I at each end. Have your scissors well sharpened, have several pieces of French chalk, a sharp pencil, and a tracing wheel.

Never try to use poor pins or bent needles. It is an unnecessary aggravation.

Be sure to keep your machine in perfect order. It should be cleaned thoroughly every few days when it is used much. Procure a pointed stick the size of a lead pencil, a piece of bent wire, a piece of soft cotton cloth, and some kerosene oil. Remove the parts of the sewing machine one by one, watching carefully where each piece belongs; then clean the body of the machine. The pointed stick will reach the corners, the bent wire will draw the cloth through small places and around the wheels, and the kerosene will clear away all dust and old oil.

It is best to let the kerosene stay in the machine over night; then in the morning wipe each part perfectly clean, oil the machine thoroughly, run several minutes to get the oil well distributed, and, if possible, allow the machine to stand over another night. In the morning run the machine a little more, and carefully wipe every part so that no oil will get on your work. It will still be necessary to watch the work through the day, as most every one is apt to put too much oil on, instead of too little, and it sometimes works out through the day.

No. 9886 is one of those nice patterns for a morning dress. When a woman comes down in the morning looking fresh and well groomed in a pretty wash dress she looks almost more attractive than she does in any other garb.

Four of these dresses give one enough so one can always look clean. In making them always bear in mind that they have to stand much washing and ironing and make them so this work can be easily and well done. That is why I have several times suggested buying a good pearl button on a shank and using the one set for all the morning dresses. The little rings are better to fasten them in with than the oblong fastener, and the eyelets through which the buttons are put are not tedious to make. You can see at once that the ironing will be simplified and no buttons pulled off and broken.

This dress is cut in two pieces—back and front—and small straps are set on at each under arm seam, through which the belt is to be slipped. The collar and pocket tops can be made of a contrasting color, and then the dress will need no other trimming.

Varied Activities of Women

In the huge plant of the General Electric company at Schenectady, N. Y., women have charge of all the high voltage work and think nothing of handling tests of tubes up to 100,000 volts.

More than 77 per cent of the 562 firms questioned by the national industrial board report satisfactory results from the experiment in the employment of female labor.

In order that she may attend the Boston High school a special dispensation has been granted to Princess Tahidol Songkla, wife of Prince Songkla, half brother of the King of Siam.

Florence E. Allen, recently sworn in as a judge in Cleveland, O., is the first of her sex in the United States to hold such a position. She is only 36 years of age and was given her law degree by New York university.

More young people are getting married today than ever before, the average age among girls being from 15 to 19 years.

The women of this country spent nearly $5,000,000 for perfumes, cosmetics and toilet preparations during the last year.

Miss Victoria Fournier, deputy county clerk of Bartlesville, Okla., issued her own marriage license when she became the bride of Warren Milligan, a newspaper reporter.

EMBROIDERED BORDER DESIGN.

EMBROIDERY is still in high favor on wearing apparel, and one sees border designs, separate conventional or flower motifs, and every sort of idea used. Beads, wool, silks, and mercerized cottons are all good, the choice naturally depending somewhat on the material to be embroidered.

A design for a border of a skirt or tunic is shown today, and can be done entirely in outline stitch, beads, French knots, or a combination of two or more. It is a good design to combine several different colors in, and another point to recommend it is that it will be easy, if it is used as a border somewhere, to take parts of it for other parts of the dress.

To transfer this design, take a perfectly smooth piece of tissue paper and a soft pencil with a rather sharp point. Fasten the paper firmly over the design, and trace the pattern exactly on the tissue paper. After this has been done, remove the tissue paper and lay, pencil side down, on the dress material, fastening it securely with thumb tacks. Then go over each part of the design with the pencil again. This second tracing will make the pencil marks on the under side leave an impression on the cloth.

Try this first on some scrap of cloth, until you find just how to handle it best.

Answers to Sewing Queries.

MRS U. J. Q.: No, we haven't the transfer pattern you ask for, but you can easily find something suitable by looking through any one of the embroidery catalogues that are printed by pattern companies.

MISS E. C.: I have written, answering your queries about the dress materials and patterns.

MISS H. S.: I am glad you like the dresser set, and think you should have no trouble in copying the shapes from the picture.

MRS. E. P. H.: If you can let me know the date the pattern was shown, I shall be glad to send you the number. I have looked through the files covering the dates you mention, but no bungalow apron is shown.

MRS. L. P.: The alphabet in filet stitch was printed so long ago it would be impossible to get a copy of the paper, but another one may be printed some time.

Bright Sayings of the Children

The Tribune will pay $1 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

Bobbie rode in an elevator for the first time and was much frightened. His father tried to soothe him, saying:

"Look, here is a little girl, and she is not at all afraid."

Immediately this little person took offense, exclaiming: "I is no girl; I is a boy," and, pulling open his coat, said, "See them pants." F. W.

Jane was quite proud of her dear baby sister, who had an unusual growth of hair. One day Jane and little sister went with mother to call upon the wee, dimpled twins next door. The twins, like most babies, had a limited supply of hair. Upon seeing them, Jane was delighted. "Muvver," she shrieked, "all two of 'm is bare-headed." F. B.

Jack, whose father deals in Holstein cattle, saw a black and white Shetland pony passing. He excitedly called to his mother: "O, mamma! Come and see the Holstein pony." V. M.

Doris went with her doctor daddy one day to make a call at the home of her friend Mary Jane, who had a new baby sister. Doris admired baby, and daddy suggested that they take her home with them.

Doris readily agreed, but Mary Jane, who had been quietly listening, said: "I guess you'll not take our baby. If you want a baby your daddy can buy one like my daddy did."

For a moment Doris was nonplused, but soon retorted: "My daddy doesn't have to buy babies. My daddy has babies to sell." F. C.

Maurice, who was not aggressive, was about to enter school. He was told to stand up for his rights, i. e., if a boy hit him to hit him back. Maurice looked up at his father and remarked: "Don't you fink I had better hit him first?" B. C. M.

Their rent having been raised, Ella's parents were considering moving and were discussing several apartments they had in view. "Well, muzzer, I hope if you do move you'll go into a neighborhood where Fido can find his equals to associate wif," reminded Ella impressively. F. J.

John was finding fault with something mother gave him for breakfast, when daddy who overheard it said: "Well, upon my word. You children are getting too particular for anything. You don't mean to tell me you want butter and jam on the same piece of bread? When I was a kid I was glad to get dry bread to eat, and no one ever took me to a nickel show." John spoke up and said: "O, gee daddy, you're having a much better time, and get much better eats living with us, don't you?" X. X.

Annual Sample Sale of Women's and Misses' Spring Suits

Values to $65.00 at

$39.75

Beginning Tomorrow at 8:30 A. M.

Offering hundreds of high-grade all-wool, all silk lined models in all the approved new styles, at a price we believe will be impossible to duplicate later in the season.

America's most prominent style exponents have contributed their sample lines to this sale at a price that will barely cover the cost of materials alone.

Hundreds of thrifty women and misses wait for this sale. They find they can get a remarkably attractive suit and save enough on it to buy new shoes and a smart Spring hat besides. An assortment of styles to select from, youthful as well as matronly, that will appeal to all types of women.

A glance at the materials will surprise you by their wonderful quality: Poiret Twills, Tricotines, Twill Cords, Men's Wear Serge, Velour Checks, etc.

In all the approved new styles. Embroidered, Braid and Plain Effects. Tailored and Semi-Tailored. Smart Flare, Belted and Blouse Models.

We do not believe that with all the buying power we are capable of exerting in the market that such suits can be offered again anywhere near this price this spring season.

Rothschilds' Greatest February Furniture Sale

Only seven days of selling left, and on Monday night, February 28th, every February ticket will be removed. As we have said many times in the past six weeks, furniture prices have reached bottom and now is the time to buy. You will save money if you do, even though you put the furniture in storage.

Labor has not yet been reduced and even though there has been a reduction in the price of lumber, it is not enough to make a $2.00 difference in the price of one of our finest dressers. Then, too, hardly a furniture factory in the United States is running full time, hundreds of them being closed entirely, awaiting the time when the public will pay a reasonable profit. Also there is a big demand for furniture—our January business this year being ahead of last January.

Sixth Floor.

When you consider all these facts, you will agree, we believe, that furniture prices cannot go any lower and that now is the time to buy—today. Easy Payments.

PLANNING THE LIBRARY.

IF you would be in brilliant company surround yourself with good books. You have all ages to draw upon, and access to the thoughts and meditations of great minds. You may misjudge a man by his clothes, but you cannot go wrong if you know what books he reads. A taste for the arts is a precious and priceless inheritance, and the human being who "is always reading" enjoys an insurance against the petty ills of life.

That mortal is rich indeed who can indulge in a library, a beautiful housing place for such literature as he loves. Here, shut away from the turmoil and scurrying packs of human folk, he can go wayfaring with his beloved comrades, forgetful of self, of bills to be paid, of income taxes, and all the rest of the irritants about which the human mind sets up its worrying machinery and goes to it.

Here shall he find tranquility of soul, inspiration to live and work and achieve, and a sublime recreation. With an easy chair, a first class book, a reading lamp, and a well bred family that knows better than to intrude upon reading hours, existence is worth while and a glorious privilege.

The fittings of a library should not be purchased whole and intact, in bulk, like so many tons of coal; the library should grow. The fun of buying books must be prolonged all through a lifetime.

We remember once, inspecting an extremely grand house, newly built and furnished. The drawing room was perfect, with an exquisite mingling of Italian, French, and English furniture of the eighteenth century. The dining room was resplendent with its paneled walls, Queen Anne sconces, and fragile china.

But the library was about as welcoming and hospitable as an ice palace. There was the mahogany desk table, with its perfect appointments of writing set and reading lamp. There were three chairs, pushed back against the wall. There were books on every one of the four sides, from floor to cornice, in unbroken lines. And the bindings all matched. There were sets upon sets.

The room possessed not half the charm of a portion of the public library. Not a thumb mark on a page. Nothing but evidence of money. It was easy enough to imagine that the book merchant was given a definite order to fill so much space and to make the bill good and properly terrible. He did.

The library should be an intimate place. It should be most decidedly restful. There, as in your bed chamber, you can indulge yourself in following out some of your own ideas in house furnishings, rather than following the set rules of the cult. What you want there, you are entitled to have; it is your refuge. And in your library the most important thing is not any piece object, but your own self.

Books impart a genuine atmosphere to a room. When a guest glances at the shelves, you experience a sensation of personal grandeur. Because you know that your books are good books; that they have not only been carefully selected but read—not once, but many times.

"Huh," he will say, "I see you read Samuel Butler. I'm fond of Chesterton, too. And Conrad—nobody like him. Flaubert? Years since I read him, but great stuff all right. I'm glad you like Anatole France"—and so on.

Your library, then, is your great pride. And what handsome company you can be in, with your shelves laden with the richest literature that has ever been put between boards.

Every library should have a fireplace. For reading and dreaming are much the same thing, and one dreams beautifully before the glowing logs. Or if not logs, then the English hobgrate for coal. At any rate, a fireplace. On one side a comfortable lounge or davenport, on the other a big sink-in easy chair.

Your fireplace will determine to a certain extent what your furnishings will be, so that is a matter to be considered carefully. You may have a Georgian fireplace, or a Tudor, or a colonial. But see that it is as simple as possible, and fight any effort to dress up the mantelpiece with trumpery. That, too, is fatal in a library. It must be an intimate place, but it must not be messy. Overmantel effects are numerous these days.

There is a wide choice of ornaments other than the everlasting trio—a clock and two candlesticks. What a surprise it would be to one's friends to vary the formula and display two clocks and one candlestick. Still, there is a limit, to self-indulgence.

Adjustable lamps are a great comfort in the library, and the floor lamp is particularly utilitarian, since it can be moved here and there, and can be turned to throw its beams upon the shelves when one is seeking a favorite volume. As lamps are necessary, so is plenty of window light, and it is a beautiful arrangement to have a bay window as a balance for the fireplace.

Footstools are always nice placed before the easy chairs, and the new reading tables, with prop for book or magazine, are both decorative and convenient. There must, of course, be a writing table or desk, and, if there is sufficient space, it is advisable to select also one large, flat table for big portfolios and magazines.

The dictionary stand and the smoking table are important. The dictionary should be close to the desk, and the smoking stand must be near a cozy chair. Have things where they are convenient. The grouping of furniture is important. Scattered objects give an all pervading suggestion that the family has just moved in and had no time in which to settle.

Floor coverings, walls and window hangings should be of quiet, restful colors—not necessarily somber, but at any rate not glaring or wearying to the eyes. The books themselves in their gay and varied bindings will furnish almost all the color tones that are necessary. Chenille rugs of taupe, dull blues, or autumn brown shades are all excellent choices. If wash fabrics are utilized at the windows, they should be practically without design or pattern; nets, tissues, and the like are preferable.

Built-in bookcases are better than the movable kind because they appear substantial and permanent. Also they afford an opportunity for beautiful effects. The fastidious housekeeper naturally takes to glass doors for the protection of fine bindings, but the open shelves are more inviting. Straight lines of shelves can be broken with pilasters and capitals and arched top shelves, if the designer inclines toward ornate effects. When there is no dearth of space the line between floor and cornice can be broken with a narrow gallery, making the books more accessible.

In a New York apartment, recently erected, the drawing room and library are combined and all books are hidden behind movable panels, the book shelves being let into the walls. This arrangement can be forgiven only as a space saver. One might as well consider hiding away one's friends in closets as to shamefacedly hide one's books away.

To what height the shelves should extend depends upon the size and arrangement of the room. When the shelves are few and low the top board furnishes a convenient place for the display of precious objects of art, with pictures or mirrors placed above. When the space is narrow the effect is best when shelves continue upward.

See that your library is humanized. If possible have each piece of furniture possess distinguishing merit. So arrange your treasures that books are easily reached. Don't be sparing with lamps. And let every object placed within the space be friendly, one to the other, so that no matter what your mood, they will include you and show you friendliness, too. Then you will be happy altogether.

Still Young in Spirit.

I flattered myself that I was not as far beyond the golden age of youth as my three grown sons would seem to prove. At least so thought I when I mounted the ladder into the upper berth. I ascended agily, disdaining the proffered help of the porter, and managed to land myself and belongings safely. Another thing that would seem to indicate I was still quite young at least in spirit was that I always wanted to make as good an impression as possible. I had noticed a most attractive young woman had the berth below mine, and so in the morning I resolved to show her that I was not as grandfatherly as she seemed to think me. What could be easier or more youthful, thought I, than to grasp the curtain pole firmly, and swing lightly down to the floor, instead of calling for the ladder? Alas, I did grasp it firmly but did not swing lightly down as I had fondly hoped. My weight, no longer as it was in the days of yore, bore not only me but curtain and curtain-rod crashing down. The young woman in the lower berth screamed at the top of her voice, and I made a hasty exit. J. S. E.

Part o' the Circus.

Several years ago, while our family was touring through northern Michigan and Wisconsin, we decided to rough it for a few weeks. The trip had been a dusty one and after a few days all of us were looking like gypsies, but being a long way from home and not knowing any one, we didn't care.

However, one afternoon we had trouble and were forced to stop at a garage. While waiting for repairs my father and I decided to walk up town, not realizing how we looked. We had not gone far when we discovered that we were the center of attraction. A group of children had gathered and was following us. Soon we heard one tell a passerby, "There's part of the circus." Then we recalled having seen posters announcing the arrival of a circus that day. Needless to say we took the side streets going back.

SUCCESS UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

NOT long ago Marion had been a guest at a luncheon given by a group of prominent business women for a visiting celebrity, and in reviewing the affair a day or two later for our benefit she told us an interesting story about one of the women in this group. The story appealed to me, and I feel that the indomitable spirit of the woman concerned in it might be an inspiration to other business women. Here is the story as Marion told it:

"Mrs. Smith's history was given to me during luncheon by a woman who's been associated with her in business for the last three or four years, and her account is, I'm sure, quite authentic.

"Before she was married she had worked for a little less than a year as a saleswoman in a department store. She had been engaged to marry before she started to work so that her job in the department store wasn't taken seriously. She was no farther advanced the day she left than she was at the end of her first week. So, according to her friend, that first experience of hers didn't count for a great deal toward her ultimate success.

"When Mrs. Smith had been married nearly nine years her husband's health began to fail. This happened just at the time when he seemed securely established in a position that enabled him to provide for his wife and their three children in a comfortable fashion. He was forced to give up his work, and the firm, in order to partly compensate the family for the father's loss in salary, offered Mrs. Smith a humble place on their clerical staff.

"She was grateful for the chance to earn a little money, and started on the unfamiliar work with the hope that her husband would be entirely well before they would need to touch the small sum credited to their account at the bank.

"But her hope was short lived. Her husband's declining strength and his need of constant and particular care forced her, after a few weeks, to give up this position. She had to face the prospect of making a living for herself and her family and at the same time give her husband the care he needed. And for a time her situation seemed fairly hopeless. Finally it occurred to her that she might turn the one accomplishment she possessed to advantage. She was a good cook, but she really excelled in making fine pastry.

"She had no so sooner thought of making pastry and other delicacies with the idea of selling them, than she put her thought into action. She solicited orders from several of the hotels and one or two of the big restaurants of the better class, and it wasn't long before she was getting a regular income from this source.

"She kept up this work during her husband's long illness and for about a year after his death. Then, with the money she had been able to save, she opened a little tearoom in the heart of the shopping district.

"By her shrewd and capable management she developed this little tea shop into a successful business and she gradually kept enlarging her quarters. Today she is owner and manager of one of the finest restaurants in town, and she has so many special orders for her famous pastry that a large corps of cooks—working under her special supervision—are kept busy filling them.

"Mrs. Smith is 55 years old, but she is as active now as she was twenty years ago, when the need for supporting her family first confronted her. There is an enormous amount of work attached to the management of her business, but she does it all herself.

"It hasn't been easy going by any means, but her fine courage has helped her to surmount safely obstacle after obstacle. She has been a source of wonder and admiration to all who know her story, and to them her present business stands as a monument to a dauntless spirit."

"I am a disabled soldier and have been in a government hospital over one year and a half. Before entering service I sold my violin and entire outfit, thinking that perhaps I would not need it again, but now I wish I had it.

"If you could help me to secure a good violin, I would appreciate it much, and I know you will give me all the support you can.

"I don't know when I will be able to go out and make a living, but when I do, I know I will have to fall back on my music. If I get a good violin, it will make it possible for me to polish up so as to be ready when I get out.

"G. G. K."

Who can gratify the wish of this soldier and bring him the help he deserves?

"A poor family living nearby is badly in need of warm clothes. The man has been unable to get work almost all winter. There are two little girls, 5 and 7. They expect another most any day. Has any one clothes they will give to them and for the coming one?

In such circumstances as this a mother needs all the help that can be spared for her.

All Mothers Will Find Use For This Laxative

Give Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin to a constipated child and note its quick recovery.

IN a growing family the subject of thought with the parents is how to keep the children healthy and happy, and what to do when they become ill. Most illnesses of childhood are the symptoms of constipation, such as headaches, coated tongues, flatulence, dizziness, loss of appetite and sleep, biliousness, etc.

You can surely feel safe in doing what tens of thousands of others do with good results, so give, according to the age of the child, a small quantity of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Eight million bottles were bought last year at drug stores. It is America's favorite family remedy for constipation, indigestion and similar ills, and is especially suitable for children, women and old folks as it is so mild and gentle in action.

There is no secret about Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a combination of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin and pleasant tasting aromatics. Druggists have sold it for thirty years, and a sixty cent bottle will last for months. Experienced mothers are never without it in the house.

Lanvin model in white tulle with bertha and five skirt ruffles of ribbon.

Dinner gown; black velvet bodice, silver tissue skirt, over drape embroidered in sequins.

THE CAPE PROBLEM.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—At last I am ready to make a positive statement in the matter of this heated argument I am having with myself. Nobody else apparently cares one way or the other, but I am all excited over the matter of capes. To relieve any suspense, Callot has just said that every house will have some in their collections.

Coats will be more universal. But the thing you will have to have if you wish to maintain yourself as a leader of fashion is a coat with a little square cape hanging from the shoulders in the rear. I said that America had been doing that for quite some time, but my friend, the vendeuse, that it would be done a different, entirely, way this summer.

You know, of course, the cape which the tenor wears in the third act. It is circular and long and looks as if it might conceal something. He throws the right corner of it over the left shoulder just before he begins his solo. Then, you know that other style of cape which the heroine of the East Lynne type of drama wears to indicate despair. It is straighter and has a hood and falls away from her shoulders in a straight line down her back, in a manner to indicate that the last thing she ever thinks about are her clothes.

Well, this little bobtail cape appended to the spring coat will be a cross between them. It will fall straight from the neck, the width of the shoulders, and it will be a little circular in shape, so that it will ripple along to the waistline. It will be for the most part detachable.

Having read this, you can go ahead and buy your cape, as I did this afternoon, and feel quite comfortable about it, for they will be worn. In other words, it isn't what you wear but the way you wear it. Don't think of one thing in the world, but your clothes, and you are pretty sure to be well dressed. In the hour when the Callot's made the statement, I bought from them a cape without armholes in it, because I thought it looked the best on me. You will be safe in continuing to follow the good old principle of consulting your own looks.

Here is one which Jane Renouard (who recently slapped her rival on both cheeks at Claridge's at tea time) wears in "The Eternal Masculine," and she doesn't look exactly passée. The cape is made of a piece of cerise velvet, lined with brilliant blue satin and edged with a wide band of mongoli—a fur from China. It looks as if it had been sliced out of a quarter of a circle of material, and is most effective in its flare. Lanvin made it. In length it comes almost to the ground.

The dinner companion of the Prince Philippe de Bourbon wore the second costume in a smart restaurant at Cannes. It was an extremely low cut black chemise gown over which hung a piece of chantilly lace, from its resting place along the sides of the brim of a wide, flat hat. It was stretched rather tightly under the chin, and fell in a scarf effect from the left side of the hat brim.

The lady wore her pearls in what to say the least is an unusual line. They fell in a loop from under her chin and over the chantilly lace to a point approximating the line of her decolletage. A sable coat completed the silhouette of this lady—which attracted much attention.

The third dress represents the coming silhouette, with its close fitting line of the hips and its flare. The artist described it for me. He called it a Lanvin model of white tulle with 1830 accents. If that is a little over your head, the latter, let me explain, consist of a bertha of pinked ribbon in turquoise blue and five skirt ruffles edged with this same pinked ribbon. A camellia in corals garnishes the side of the skirt.

But you can still be thin below the hips if you like that figure better. The Spanish dancer's bodice is tight and of black velvet—and low in the hips—only I don't mean it was worn by such a person. That's just the name of that type of bodice. A well known French woman had it on the other evening at dinner.

The short skirt is of silver tissue, edged with black beads, but it only has a chance to show in front. Descending over it from the bodice and slanting off it in the long, clean cut line of a wing in flight, is an overdress of silver tissue embroidered in white sequins and edged with a fringe of monkey fur.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair of which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Sunday Tribune. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Better Speak Frankly.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 18 and have been going steady with a young man of 20 years. I love him dearly and I know he loves me, but I have seen him intoxicated twice. Should I let this go on without doing anything? I don't know how to approach him to tell him he ought to stop. AMY."

If you love him, Amy, dear, you would better talk to him right away about the drinking and how grievously it hurts you to see him intoxicated. You might even, in the hope of effecting a cure, let him choose between you and the drinking. Your interest may be the means of correcting the habit in its infancy.

He Has Changed.

"Dear Miss Blake: A boy friend of mine whom I like a great deal and who had the same feeling towards me has recently seemed to change. I found out that last summer, while making his expenses to go through college, by working in a country resort, he met a young girl of about 15 or 16, who attracted him. Since he came back he only calls for me once every month, whereas he called quite often before. I recently discovered that he sees this girl quite often. As I am three years older than this other girl, and much prettier, I do not see the reason for his lack of interest in me. Can you, through your knowledge of such affairs, help me?

"L. S."

Don't you think perhaps your idea that you are so much prettier than the other girl might have something to do with it? Conceit is not a pretty quality, nor a wearing one. Suppose you reflect on that just a little bit, L. S.

Don't Be Too Curious.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl between 17 and 18 years old. I love a boy dearly and he says he loves me, but when it comes right down to it he does not show his love at all. Please advise me how to find out if his love is true.

"H. B."

Just what do you expect of a young man, Heartbroken? Perhaps if he doesn't take you to theaters and dances it is because he has all he can do to pay his board, his laundry, and for a nice clean shave when he comes to call on you. You mustn't be too exacting of these young men under the present living circumstances. The spirit may be willing but the pay envelope weak.

Color Lore

DORIS BLAKE

Green is forsaken, yellow forsworn.
But blue is the luckiest color that's worn.

IN Egypt, yellow represents that death is the end of all human hope, because this is the color of the leaves when they fall.

In Ethiopia, brown signifies death, because it is the color of the earth to which all return.

On the Nile black was lucky in sacrifice. A black bull, black sheep, or black chicken were used to appease the gods.

Blue is heavenly, truth, love, constancy, fidelity.

In the United States flag blue is love, faith, and steadfastness.

Green is jealousy, but also immortal hope, especially of the eternal life and victory. It is the color of the laurel and the palm.

Yellow is the symbol of the sun, God's goodness, marriage, faithfulness: On the malevolent side it denotes deceit, inconstancy, and malice.

The mourning color in America and most of Europe is black, but in Turkey it is violet, and in China, white.

Purple is the color of royalty, loyalty, and things true in celestial origin.

Violet is love and truth, but also passion and suffering.

Red indicates love and courage. In the United States flag, it means royalty, fire.

Gray is the shade of penance and sin.

On the malevolent side red indicates the love of evil, hatred, and other malignant passions.

Black is death, mourning, despair, earthliness, wickedness, negation, darkness.

Indians think blue is a lucky color. Some tribes, however, prefer white for their lucky color.

The Scotch think green is a fatal color and should never be worn. The Irish, on the contrary, have taken it for their national color, and think it lucky.

The Sioux Indians use green as a funeral color, and so green is never seen upon the living, as that would be unlucky.

The Moki Indians have sacred colors for their prayers, yellow for pumpkins, green for corn, and red for peaches. Black and white bands are typical of rain; red and blue of lightning.

Violet is a significant color. The Madonna wore it after the crucifixion, and the Savior after the resurrection. In these cases it is symbolic of passion and suffering, love and truth.

White is the token of life, light, religious purity, innocence, faith and joy. In the United States flag it means integrity of purpose; in the judge, justice; in women, chastity; in the sick, humility; in grief, peace.

Both green and red were deemed fortunate colors by the Cakchiquel Indians; the former as that of the flourishing plant, the latter as that of the ripe and golden ears of maize.

Red is the lucky color in China.

Red and yellow, catch a fellow.
Blue and pink, he'll catch you.
Pink and blue, he'll be true.
Black and white, hold him tight.

When a Sioux Indian courts a girl, he paints his eyes blue and yellow, and she paints hers red, as these are the lucky colors of love.

A Los Angeles Indian girl paints her cheeks red when she is in love, so as to win the man she fancies.

In Shetland red is called the color of fightning and also the color of love. Hence the red winged lady bird and the red billed and red legged stork are sacred to the goddess of love; the former being called the heavenly messenger of love, the latter being believed to bring the babies.

Do you know that Clear-Tone—the wonder-working lotion—used like toilet water—of Pimples, Blackheads, Acne Eruptions, Enlarged Pores, Oily or Shiny Skin? Elegant after Shaving. Indispensable for sensitive and refined women.

Clears Your Skin

GUARANTEED to banish unsightly blemishes easily and quickly, and leave the skin clear and smooth.

"A Clear-Tone Skin"

This Free Booklet tells how you can easily and quickly at home obtain a clear skin, free from all blemishes, like Nature intended you to have. Thousands of copies of this interesting book are distributed every month.

Clear-Tone is not a cure-all or mail order treatment, but a scientific, reliable SKIN LOTION, perfected after 16 years personal experience by Mr. E. J. Givens, who knows every embarrassment one has to suffer with a bad complexion. Endorsed and prescribed by physicians, druggists, and thousands of enthusiastic users, and sold on a direct and positive guarantee of satisfaction or money back. The marvel of Clear-Tone is that it clears the complexion so quickly, no matter what the cause.

Clear-Tone has had an unprecedented success as evidenced by thousands of voluntary letters written by men and women who had very bad blemishes and tried various soaps, ointments, and doctors without relief.

Read These Letters!

From U. S. Hospital—"Find myself improving wonderfully. Any one I see that has skin trouble your wonderful Clear-Tone will be surprised." Chas. A. Rein, U. S. Hospital 61, Staten Island, N. Y.

From a Barber—"Have been a barber for 18 years and never saw anything as good as Clear-Tone. All barbers should know about it." Otis Van Burin, Kansas City, Mo.

From a Musician—"I am obliged to be in public a great deal and my complexion was a great embarrassment. Clear-Tone improved me so much that I strongly recommend it." C. H. Lindeman, Steubenville, Ohio.

From a Lady—"I cannot thank you enough for all the good it has done me. One bottle has cleared my face wonderfully." Miss Mary Yonks, Haverstraw, N. Y.

From a Soldier—"This certainly wonderful." Leslie Langer, Troop F, 3rd Cavalry, Ft. Ethan Allen, Vt.

From a Flyer—"Cleared my face of Acne." R. J. Howard, N. H. Station, Pensacola, Fla.

People Amazed—"Has cleared my skin completely of pimples and blackheads. Everybody who sees me is amazed." R. R. Wilson, Pearson, Ga.

Thousands of Others—men and women—prefer Clear-Tone. We'll gladly send copies of many interesting testimonials.

THE TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

By Jane Eddington.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

DISHES FROM HALIBUT.

THE fish kettle is no longer listed among the indispensable utensils in the kitchen battery. One reason for this may be because kitchens are so small, but another is that the kitchen and living room are likely to be so near one another. The majority of people believe that you cannot boil fish without scenting up the whole house with a disagreeable odor.

There is a way of preventing the odor and another way of making it an agreeable one. Gentle cooking, or what is called poaching, will hinder its diffusion in large measure. Fish cooked with too much fire not only "smells up" a house, but it is strong of flavor. Moreover, it is not as digestible.

The principle involved is a general one, but because of the chemical composition of fish it also has a specific application. Boiling spoils tea, and long and hard boiling ruins any number of vegetables, while it hardens meat and fish as well as makes them strong.

The Odor That Lingers.

If fish is simmered only, and with aromatic celery tops, green pepper, and carrots, and we are careful to clean anything that it touches, and clean out all waste from it, there need not be that lingering odor which some dislike more than the odor of the cooking fish.

Next to fish in the can, there is no way of getting fish dishes with so little trouble as in making them from the large halibut steak. This can be boiled or poached in a chafing dish; we can bake a chowder made from it in the casserole in the oven, or we can cook a halibut steak in a sauce—poach it—on top of the stove.

Out of the boiled steak we may make timbales, or a fish pudding, or a salad, or fish in aspic, or fish balls, and many other things. Any bit of fish left over can be put into a white sauce, filled into ramekins, covered with bread crumbs, and baked until it puffs. If in addition to the white sauce we use an egg we may call the preparation, whether baked in ramekins or in one large mold, a soufflé.

Boiled Halibut Steak.

If a kettle with a fish drain is used some people like to put the slice on the drain and dip the whole into the boiling water prepared for cooking the fish, to set the albumen. It is then lifted out, the water allowed to boil up again, then a pound slice of steak is put back and allowed to cook gently for twenty minutes.

If the slice is to be served whole, with a sauce either separately or over it, this insures its keeping its shape. If it is to be flaked at once, as in making a fish pudding or timbales, it does not make so much difference.

Prepare the water in which it is to be cooked by adding one teaspoon of salt per pint or more, if to taste, a few drops of lemon juice, some sweet green pepper, a slice of onion, some celery tops or a bay leaf, and if the liquid in which the fish is to be cooked is to be used for a fish aspic a clove may be added. Some slices of carrot and a spray of parsley instead of the bay leaf or any other dry spices, insure a mild and pleasant aroma.

Butter and Egg Sauce.

The thicker the slice of halibut, the milder may be the sauce. For thin slices use tomato or Creole sauces. The old-fashioned butter sauce, especially with some boiled eggs sliced in it—the egg may be chopped fine if desired—has its merits. Make this exactly like a white sauce, using boiling water instead of milk. Two boiled eggs to one cup of sauce is sufficient. Or two raw egg yolks may be stirred into a thin sauce to thicken and make it richer.

It is well to have this sauce thick, so if the raw yolks are not used, melt up two tablespoons of butter instead of one, stir two tablespoons of flour into it, add a scant teaspoon of salt, and add the cup of boiling water gradually, stirring every minute. By adding capers this becomes caper sauce. Horseradish may also be added to it.

Fish Stock.

Some of the liquid, which is really a fish stock, in which the slice of halibut steak was simmered, may be used in the butter sauce after being strained, and some also in the white sauce to which the cheese is added, or a sauce thickened with butter and flour may be made entirely of it.

For an elegant gelatin salad some of this stock strained through a thick cloth may be thickened with gelatin—preferably the isinglass sheet—for a fish aspic. A little lemon juice improves this. It may be necessary to boil the strained liquid and boil it up again and strain.

A chowder may be made of this stock by adding it to some potatoes and onions, with finally a little butter and milk or cream when the whole is cooked. Usually the potatoes will thicken it sufficiently, but a little flour thickening may be added, after which the chowder should be cooked at least twenty minutes.

Fish Stock from Trimmings.

One pound of fish trimmings and bones for each quart of water, one or two small onions, some by-product celery and other seasonings, with a dry pepper pod, will make an excellent fish stock which, with vegetables, can be used for a number of palatable soups more or less of the chowder order. If the ingredients in a kettle and shake them over the fire until well heated through, then add cold water and simmer from twenty to thirty minutes.

Halibut Napes Chowder.

The pieces of meat in the cheek bones of a trout are by some people considered to be more like veal or pork than fish, and are treated accordingly. Around the shoulder or neck bones of the halibut and cod, which are as bones excellent for soup stock, there are also pieces of meat enough—say in two halibut necks or "napes"—to make a chowder for three people. These pieces are quite generally thrown away by the average butcher, or may be bought for a song.

Take off the flesh, cut it in dice, and use it to make a chowder, fisherman's style. Fry out some dice of salt pork in an iron kettle, put over this a layer of sliced or diced potatoes, then a layer of onions and one of fish, repeating until kettle is well filled. Just cover with cold water, bring to a boil, and cook until potatoes and fish are done; then add milk or cream and crackers.

Halibut Pudding.

Take a slice of simmered halibut, remove bones, shred, and add to it a cup of white sauce or a sauce which is half fish stock. Line a small baking dish with mashed potato, put in the creamed fish, cover it with mashed potato, smooth top, and dot with bits of butter or pour a little melted butter over it, and lightly brown under the broiler or in an oven hot enough to puff the potato. Serve with or without sauce.

Poached Halibut Steak.

Unless nicely brushed with butter and well seasoned, a broiled halibut steak is dry eating, but cooked in a sauce it may be not only delicious but a handsome dish. I know of few ways of cooking fish that are equal to the following: Take one slice of halibut of the middle size and a little less than an inch thick, one-half cup of fish stock, one-half cup of cream, one tablespoon of butter, one tablespoon of flour, one or two carrots, one tablespoon of chopped onion or more if to taste, a little salt, paprika, and lemon. Instead of the sauce of fish stock and cream, a white sauce may be used.

Sweat the onion in the butter without browning it in the slightest. This can be done in a pint saucepan, covered, and over a tiny fire. Stir the flour into the mixture and add the liquid cold—the fish stock and cream or just milk. Stir constantly and cook until thickened.

Take off the fire and add to it the red part of the carrot cut in thin long shreds. Other vegetables cut in small dice may be added. A little green pepper cut fine or pimento adds to the picture the finished dish makes.

Put the slice of halibut into a small baking tin which has been buttered, and pour the sauce over it, lifting it so that some sauce will be underneath and cooking gently, on no account allowing it to boil, so that the sauce will cook away, with frequent basting. This may be cooked, that is, poached, directly over a gas burner, turned low, in twenty-five minutes, or it may be baked in a hot oven in thirty minutes with basting.

When it is done take it up carefully on a hot platter of the right size, baste the fish with the sauce so that the strings of carrot will be scattered over the fish ornamentally, and then set the whole under the broiler rather than close to the fire, so that little brown, but not black, blisters will form on the sauce. These are ornamental, and a little paprika may be dotted here and there over the dish. Serve at once, dipping sauce over each portion served.

Raisins are a beauty food

These luscious grapes, dried in the pure air of open vineyards, are a true health food—rich in natural iron content. This helps to give ruddy, rosy cheeks. Eat raisins daily.

Free 93 Raisin Recipes

Send the coupon below for our complete book of recipes, compiled by experts. It gives the choice ways to use raisins—many new. Merely fill out the coupon and mail at once.

Ask the Men

what pie they like—see how many vote Raisin

Take a vote on pies in your home and you'll make mostly raisin pies. For raisins make a food-dessert that quickly revives spent energies.

Raisins furnish 1560 units of energizing nutriment per pound. They are 75 per cent pure fruit-sugar in practically predigested form.

So the nutriment of raisin pie is almost immediately assimilated. Men like the flavor and they feel the strength this fine dessert imparts.

Try one tonight. You'll never have to ask men what pie they like thereafter. You'll serve raisin pie at least once a week, for pie like this is far too good to be but an occasional delight. Every first-class baker has this pie.

SUN-MAID RAISINS

Use these raisins for home cooking, for they are the finest raisins grown—the kind you know are good.

Made from choicest California table grapes, tender, meaty, juicy and thin-skinned.

Cut This Out and Keep It

Recipe for Real Raisin Pie

2 cups Sun-Maid raisins
1½ cups boiling water
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons cornstarch
Juice 2 lemons
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
Juice 1 orange
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
1 cup chopped walnuts

Cook raisins in boiling water for five minutes; pour into sugar and cornstarch, which have been mixed. Cook until thick; remove from fire and add other ingredients. Bake between two crusts. Walnuts may be omitted if desired.

Use in scores of foods

Learn how boiled rice, oatmeal, stewed prunes, bread pudding and other economical foods are given a "chef's touch" with the raisin. When you know you'll do as millions do—you'll use the raisin freely for food value, for nutrition.

Three varieties: Sun-Maid Seeded (seeds removed); Sun-Maid Seedless (grown without seeds); Sun-Maid Clusters (on the stem). All dealers sell them. Insist upon Sun-Maid brand.

The Theaters

By Percy Hammond

WITH four new dramas and Mrs. Field's wrestling exercises in conjuence this week, the theater correspondent will have to be as agile as a flea or as a music critic on a melodious Sunday afternoon.

What to do! What to do! This evening "Dulcy" and "Shavings" begin. Tomorrow "Cognac" and "When We Are Young"—and on Tuesday, under the imperial auspices of philanthropy, the gladiators in games at the Coliseum. Adventure sits seductive on our doorstep.

The approaching performers, too, are popular and important, and make the situation still more intricate. The red carpet, Collins! and Amy, see that Bill puts up the canopy lest it come on to rain. Swell guests are at the threshold. Miss Lynn Fontanne is hard-by and Henry Hull, Harry Beresford, George Marion, Gregory Kelly, Tom Powers, John Westley, and the Tell girls, Olive and Alma—practically all the Tells, except William. Two of the new plays, "Cognac" and "Dulcy," are unknown to the busy haunts of men, and they are here on trial for Broadway, the suspicion being that if they do well here they'll do well there. "Shavings" and "When We Are Young" are city-broke. They were weighed in New York and found to be, more or less, not wanting.

In "Cognac," by David Arnold Baleh, Mr. Powers will be a doughboy, home from France with his bride, Miss Olive Tell, a belle of Bordeaux. Trouble follows the discovery that the lady has a perfumed past. The time is the present and the place an inland hamlet. Miss Fontanne in "Dulcy," if one may be permitted to say so, will be a vivacious platitudinarian, speaking homilies all the while, and causing trouble for her husband, a New York wrecker who needs money. Other characters will be the head of the gem trust, his pretty daughter, a writer of motion scenarios, a romantic young socialist, and a criminal butler. There is no information about "When We Are Young," except that it is acted by Henry Hull, Miss Alma Tell, and George Marion, and that the scene is New York and the time the present.

"Shavings," in which Harry Beresford will come to Powers' this evening, is about a Cape Cod toymaker whose amiable disposition and eager unselfishness cause him to be regarded by his fellow New Englanders as the "town crank." Village romances are his specialty, and he exchanges good advice for confidences with the young lovers of the neighborhood, guiding them to or from the precarious brink of matrimony. At the end he falls in love himself, but renounces his romance, as is his self-inflicted practice. Familiar names in Mr. Beresford's support are those of James Bradbury, long a favorite at the La Salle; Charles Dow Clark, who used to play jays for Mr. Cohan; and Miss Clara Moores, once a Hyde Park High school girl, a product of Miss Anna Morgan's academy of histrionism and former leading woman for Taylor Holmes in "Bunker Bean" and William Hodge in "A Cure for Curables." Also Mitchell Harris, the principal actor of the stock company at the Wilson Avenue theater several seasons ago.

THE urban progress of Cleveland, O., is further marked by the christening of that capital's show center as "Playhouse Square." New and impending theaters in the neighborhood of Fourteenth street and Euclid avenue are the Ohio, the Hanna, and, again as Mr. Nathan might say, a couple of booby-cotes built by the Winter Garden and the Keith vaudeville interests. Mr. Hoyt of the Plain Dealer writes that Cleveland now can boast a theatrical district "comparing more than favorably with any other city in the United States—except, of course, Broadway, than which there is none other."

The Cleveland tin-horner, who sends me the news about Playhouse Square, predicts that Cleveland, within a few years, will be more of a city than Chicago, which, he says, is merely a big town with a small-town soul.

I wonder if those who are dubious about Chicago's future are aware of the movement now in progress to develop and to fix us permanently as the master-metropolis. I refer, of course, to the "Boost Chicago" signs which beautify our boulevards with stimulating admonitions and cause our visitors to gape with pleasure at our urban ways.

"Have you made your necessary purchases?" is the sly suggestion contained in one of them, filling thereby the busy basements with thrifty yeomen who otherwise might have escaped among the catalogues. Other boostings are less mercenary and more hospitable. Our youth, comeliness, health, and dimensions are set forth in beguiling ejaculations which tell the world that we are sole and unparalleled; and, no doubt, the world believes it. So long as we have our billboards we need not fear the envious rivalry of Cleveland and its Playhouse Square. New York hasn't got them, nor has any other American city, of a population exceeding 12,000.

Poor Mr. Gilpin, the Negro star of Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones," is not to be asked to the Drama league's banquet to the good actors in New York on March 6, although there was a determined movement among the members of the organization to include him with the others. To make it easier for Mr. Gilpin to bear the snub, the league wrote to him, assuring him of its distinguished consideration. And closing the vote by [illegible] was turned down. The figures were so close that they were considered complimentary. Resignations, the World says, are threatened.

Among those who spoke in Huneker's funeral in New York none was so gracious, eloquent, and honest as the New York Times. After half a column's sane estimation and merited praise of Mr. Huneker, the Times ended its tribute by saying: "In a profession in which few men are loved and most men intolerable, he was the warm and generous big brother. Especially he was adored by the artists whom he ridiculed, burlesqued—and lifted to the

A Presentation of the Passion Play Is Attempted by a Cast in Hoboken

By James Whittaker.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—[Special.]—For one reason or another the passion of Christ is theatrical contraband. The principal reason, I gather, is that it is sacrilegious to give publicity to divinity. In some places it is illegal to portray the Christ on the stage. In others He may be named, but the actor may not speak the fine dramatic words of the New Testament.

Some writers for the theater have approached the theme of Christ but timidly. Ibsen, in "Cæsar and Galilean," dramatizes Christ as an atmosphere, not a rôle. Julien, Ibsen's pagan emperor, fights the gray ghost of Christian asceticism and finally succumbs to an opposition which Ibsen did not dare to characterize in the flesh. And yesterday, what a rôle we have in Jesus!

The passion play which I saw last Sunday in West Hoboken has that rôle. This Lenten drama is an earnest amateur effort of the lay members of a Catholic congregation in the poorest, grayest, smudgiest quarter of the little commercial city across the Hudson river. The actors have special authority from the church to deal with the forbidden sacred subject. This they do with no expertness, but great sincerity.

The practical illusion is nil. The spiritual illusion is complete. With the exception of myself, the audience was of the faithful, and responded easily to the spiritual illusion. The experiment, then, was on me. The test of the drama would be by Broadway-wise reaction.

Assuming, then, that I am an average combustible spectator, I am proof that the drama of Christianity is actor proof. The West Hoboken players' barren allusions to the story we learn first of all and unconsciously live with all our lives fires the leanest of imaginations with the leanest imagery.

Annoying were the gew-gawdy scenes, painted by some praying Hoboken house painter. Deadly were the garglied accents of the struggling players. The modest attempts to recreate the lascivious picture of tottering Rome of the year 33 were, of course, cowardly and decent, as befitted the innocence of the participating maidens of the congregation.

The players religiously conspired to kill their play, but could not. And when the leading lady with the eloquence of a clerk of the house of representatives declaimed the words, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," I felt my aura bristle.

Now, I have been in and out of every theater door of Broadway this winter, and have not once felt my aura bristle. I have seen the newly famous Ben-Ami, the ferved Jew of "Samson and Delilah," and even here my aura kept its normal pale repose. I can only assume that the theatrical thrill of faith is greater than the theatrical thrills of love, hate, and danger. The drama of Christ cries out for expert playing. That would be the experience of a decade.

The argument of the devout against a Broadway Christ would be against profanation by commercialism. But the history of the West Hoboken passion play is fairly commercial. The idea of an American passion play is after the example of the world's festival of Oberammergau in Austria, and many years ago in California a Spanish priest staged the first American Christus seventh heaven on a word of merited praise."

Mr. Belasco, later in the year, will present E. Temple Thurston's play, "The Wandering Jew," in which Mathieson Lang has been successful since September at the New theater in London. "The Wandering Jew" in the drama moves through the ages seeking his destiny. The author shows why no man can be happy out of his own time, so the final redemption by death is accepted as a happy ending. Instead of acts, the play is divided into phases, of which there are four.

George V. Newton, deputy commissioner of internal revenue at Washington, in charge of the income tax unit, has resigned from the service of the republic to take a position with A. L. Erlanger. Mr. Newton will be governor-in-chief of the business end of Mr. Erlanger's empire. He is from Missouri and has worked for the United States for twenty-one years.

Speaking of Mr. Erlanger's empire recalls the fact that he and J. J. Shubert, his chief adversary in the drama, are antagonists also in the persistent accumulation of Napoleonana. Mr. Erlanger has been at it longer than Mr. Shubert, but Mr. Shubert's collection is said to be moving with rapidity upon the heels of that of his rival.

Morris Gest, the producer of "Mecca," is a feature in one of the movie news weeklies. He is seen defying his critic, Henry Ford, and the caption represents him as saying "I hope Henry won't pay me that $1,000,000 damages in flivvers."

A Mr. Naylor, a correspondent of the New York Times, is contemptuous of Chicago in an article in that newspaper, discussing our theater aspirations. "Like a goblin in a bedtime fairy story, comes a villainous laugh from this western city and a sneer of intellectual pride, both audible as far as Times Square on the Island of Manhattan," says Mr. Naylor.

"'Down with Broadway,' rasped a voice through the noise and the darkness of day. Amid the falling flakes of soot and breeze-blown fog it sounded rather horrible.

"Down with Broadway and Times Square! We know what art is. We ain't goin' to be no one-night stand outta New York any longer. And they'll send us what we like. They pooh-pooh us because 'Beyond the Horizon' failed in Chicago. It should fail. We want life, reality, not the sentimental tragedy of impossible places. 'Beyond the Horizon,' indeed! Let's pooh-pooh New York. Whoever heard of the horizon? Why, nobody in this entire city ever saw such a place. Impossible!"

"Near Santa Barbara," which was "Poker Ranch," briefly at the Olympic, has succumbed in New York, and its star and author, Willard Mack, will shift himself tomorrow night to another of his compositions called "Smooth as Silk."

March 4 is the date announced for the premiere at Stamford, Conn., of the new play which H. H. Frazee will produce by the same H. S. Sheldon who wrote "The Havoc." It is a comedy called "The Girl or the Dollar," and the company will include Taylor Holmes, Edith King, Helen Stewart, Percy Moore, and Stephen Maley.

Writing from Paris to a friend in New York George Middleton has this news to tell: "I go over to London tomorrow to rehearse 'Polly with a Past' and 'Collusion,' a one act play of mine which Nazimova did in America. The latter play is to be done at the London Grand Guignol, which has made a big success, I am happy to say. They have a remarkably versatile actress there named Sybil Thorndyke, who plays everything, from tragedy to farce, equally well.

"The big success in Paris is 'The Eighth Wife of Bluebeard,' which, I understand, all the managers are after: It is a very amusing comedy, with a new twist of the old bed. Really, they've found a new twist. Most of the plays here are very light and trivial, but the theaters are full, and they have raised the prices to 30 francs. When I came over in September they were 20, as compared to 12 before the war. The new Palais Royal farce is packing them in; it is a characteristic French product, which probably will find its way to America much deodorized. But it is funny how they do this bunk over here."

John Golden announces his next production as "Happy New Year," a comedy by Hale Hamilton and Viola Brothers Shore. This is Mr. Hamilton's second play. He was co-author of "Dear Me" with Luther Reed.

In response to a cablegram from London requesting Henry Miller and Blanche Bates to appear in "The Famous Mrs. Fair" in the British metropolis this spring, Mr. Miller has commenced negotiations to take the entire American company there, following the Boston engagement, which begins in April. The success of this distinctively American play has occasioned the postponement of this season's contemplated transcontinental tour until next year, when Mr. Miller and Miss Bates will visit the Pacific coast with the possibility of an engagement at Honolulu. In this event they will be seen in "Moliere," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," and one or two new plays.

By Mae Tinée.

THIS is an awfully nice little picture. It has an interesting story and is well acted and put on. Worth your money any time you want an hour's entertainment.

The scenes are laid in New York's Chinatown. The heroine is a small Jenny haired maiden soon to be sixteen, and, when that day arrives, to be married to a suave and sinister Yen Low, who has won for himself the title of Emperor of Chinatown. Wing Toy doesn't want to wed him, but the emperor has spoken, and so, it seems, must it be.

Much mystery surrounds little Wing Toy. When a baby she had been left in the care of a kindly Chinese laundryman by a horrible creature known as "The Mole." This person refused to tell where the baby came from, and disappeared into the night, leaving the child.

Poverty creeps up on Wong, the Chinaman. Not being willing that the child whom he has learned to adore shall suffer, he goes with her to the emperor and begs that the latter will adopt the little lady. This the emperor agrees to do, and Wong signs a paper. After which he is told that while Wing Toy shall be a daughter and she is sixteen, she shall afterwards be the wife of Yen Low, who will then divorce his first wife, a white girl.

Raymond McKee comes into the story as a cub reporter who sees and becomes interested in the pretty princess of Chinatown. Then the district attorney is suddenly galvanized into action by sneering telephonic communication from "The Mole." Then—

But I must tell you no more of the story if you are to enjoy the picture! One thing is sure—you will find Miss Nissy adorable. Harry Northrup is fascinating as the evil emperor, and all other parts are most satisfactorily played.

"The Devil," which will introduce Doris Arliss to the movie fans, will be released shortly. Mr. Arliss will number among the people of his cast Mrs. Arliss, Sylvia Breamer, Lucy Cotton, and Edmund Lowe. The production, which will be released through Pathe, is being sponsored by Andrew J. Callaghan, a Chicago man.

MORRIS GEST

Mr. Gest, the producer of "Mecca," is summoned from New York to the city hall to answer Mr. Arthur Burrage Farwell's charge that Miss Martha Lorber, the premier danseuse, is not well dressed. A paragraph from the late Mr. Huneker's last dramatic criticism may be testimony for both sides. "The sinuous, enticing Miss Lorber," wrote Mr. Huneker, "with a body as sensuous as a single line of John Keats, flashes tantalizing tangents and zigzags and curved rhythms in and out of the symphony of lust, cruelty, and perfumed desires. Perfume, the Eighth Deadly Sin!"

Marguerite Clark is in Louisiana, vacationing. She has completed her first independent production, "Scrambled Wives."

Mr. Griffith announces that he will soon produce "Faust."

Ask Me! Ask Me!

AN ASPIRANT: If you will send me a stamped and self addressed envelope, I'll be glad to mail you a copy of the copyright laws in which you are interested.

GENEVIEVE C.: I never heard of the company you mention. If I were you I'd be good and sure the people connected with it were reliable before investing any money.

M. E. F.: The pictures you mention have already appeared in the roto section. We'll try, however, to put others in some time soon, seeing as how you lost out on the first ones.

LEE: Why did you want to get acquainted with me "before mother came home?" You say you could have fixed it so "adroit and beautiful." Lee, regarding thee, I'm at sea—enlighten me. Don't worry, I shall never join the movies.

F. N. R.: Thank you for writing.

G. C. S.: I don't know why when they adopt a picture from a good story the producers so often see fit to change the name. I agree with you in thinking that in most cases it is a sad mistake. I also think with you that no attempt should be made to picturize a book or play unless the producers have the money and wish to make the adaptation as near like the original as possible.

JOHANNA: Clairvoyant, are you, Johanna? Well—and again, well! (And don't call me sir!)

F. J. K.: Get as personal as you like—in the sweet way that seems to be all your own—I don't mind a bit. I rather like your suggestion, and will think it over. Paper is scarce with us, but I'm glad to see it isn't in your family. Six feet two, are you? "Complexion dark, age 20, hard to please?" Heavings, but you sound interesting!

E. L., P. M.: I think you mean Dick Lee.

EX-SOLDIER: You're entitled, sir, to your own opinion.

M. P. B.: Why won't you be just a little patient? You're going to be so happily surprised some day.

A HUNCH: Ho, hum! Yawn.

MRS. C. M. S.: Will you send me a stamped and self addressed envelope, please, for the list of movie producers.

J. D. C.: You read like Bradstreet, and Dun.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

Unlike Ancients, Society Combines Charity and Sport

By Mme. X.

SINCE the beginning of time, sports and society have been more or less yoke-mates. Grecian women, young and old, were either spectators of or participants in the Greek games which were such a feature of the life of their time. Roman matrons and maids watched from their boxes the chariot races and gladiatorial contests which filled the great Coliseum with crowds and clamor. Undoubtedly the women of Carthage and their sisters of Babylon, Tyre, and other centers of human activities looked on at the games and trials of strength and skill which helped make their men strong and formidable warriors.

So when such leaders of fashion and society as Mrs. Marshall Field, of Chicago and Miss Anne Morgan of New York go in for big sporting events like wrestling and boxing matches they are entering spheres of action not entirely new for women. When they combine sport and philanthropy, however, they give the touch of the twentieth century to an ancient institution.

Charity was almost unknown to the lovers of sports of olden times. What a lot they missed! What a grand time Cornelia and the other Roman matrons, the Mesdames Marshall Field, Kellogg Fairbank, and Joseph G. Coleman of their times, could have had hiring the Roman Coliseum and presenting pageants and prize fights for the benefit of some Roman philanthropy! Can't you see their flaring posters? "Be sure not to miss the great show! Ten thousand Christians will be thrown to the lions today in the Coliseum at 2 o'clock, under the auspices of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

A First Class Sporting Event.

Joking aside, the wrestling match which will take place on Tuesday evening at the Coliseum is a first class sporting event and a show to which a man can safely take his own mother. When the sensitive contend that it is a brutal business, the sport-wise fraternity points out that no one has ever lost his life in a wrestling match.

Its quality is still further attested by the fact that, whereas fighters who reach the advanced age of 30 are considered aged and out of the running, wrestlers pursue their calling for another decade or two. The world's champion, the Polish Stanislaw something, is over 40.

It is a bloodless, clean trial of strength between men who have made the development of the body, the training of its muscles, nerves, and sinews a science. Wrestlers are always decent citizens, who live temperately, exercising self-restraint and moderation in a way and to a degree many a citizen in the higher walks of life might well copy.

No man needs even to be hurt in a wrestling match. The wrestler has it all in his own hands. In this a wrestling match differs from a prize fight. In the latter a man can be knocked as far as the next world before he can even say "enough!" A wrestler has only to admit that his adversary is too much for him, and allow a point to be scored. Even "Strangler" Lewis' famous strangle hold is said to be not so formidable as it is reputed to be.

The big show billed for Tuesday evening at the Coliseum will present three championship matches, world championships, too. The first one will be the match between Jack Reynolds, welterweight champion, and Spyros Vorres, who challenges him. The principals in the second one depend, at the present writing, on the one who comes out ahead in last Friday's contest between Johnny Meyers and Prehn. The winner is challenged by Lou Talaber. Jim Londos, who claims the light heavyweight championship, will have to prove it with John Pesek.

It is the first time in mat history that three championship titles have been contested at one time. So you see it is a more than usually interesting and, from a sporting point of view, important event.

Box Sale Splendid.

Of the 195 boxes, on Wednesday last 127 had been sold, so it is safe to prophesy that practically all of them will be disposed of by Tuesday. And almost all the box buyers plan to occupy their own boxes. In cases where they are not able to, or do not want to do so, their buyers are giving them to convalescent soldiers.

It has been much discussed what is the proper garb for the occasion. At the National Sporting club in London, at the Cirque de Paris, and at Madison Square Garden in New York, evening dress is worn by society folk who attend evening events given in those historic precincts. As a matter of private opinion sports clothes seem more appropriate, because in the sporting world there should be no distinction of persons. Every one should be on the same footing and, as the chief outward mark of difference in circumstances is clothes, as far as possible these should be of the same kind.

In getting up this event Mrs. Field has given a great deal of her time and strength. She has gone into what were to her new fields. She has spent several hours each day at her office. She has even become a public speaker. She has addressed the Association of Commerce, an honor accorded to few women. She has also made a speech at a meeting of Elks.

On both occasions she is reported to have made a most favorable impression, which still further confirms the writer in her opinion that, as a rule, when they have something they care for and believe in, as a theme for a speech, women are better speakers than men. They are more direct and come quicker to the point. They have not the hampering tradition that a speech must begin, continue, and finish with a funny story, no matter how remote from the matter in hand the funny story may be.

Homes for Children Benefit.

The three charities to benefit from the money raised at the Tuesday evening world's champion wrestling contests are the Country Home for Convalescent Crippled Children, the Home for Destitute Crippled Children, and St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, three institutions which merit the hearty support of the public.

Maj. Frederic McLaughlin is chairman of the executive committee getting up the affair. Mrs. Field, the chief figure in the enterprise, is chairman of the women's committee, and Harold E. Foreman is treasurer. Other women on Mrs. Field's committee are Mrs. Ogden Armour, Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. George D. McLaughlin, and Miss Agnes Foreman.

On Maj. McLaughlin's committee are Stanley Field, Robert A. Gardner, Donald Ryerson, and Maj. A. A. Sprague. Spearman Lewis is secretary and Joseph M. Coffey is "official matchmaker" (it sounds like a role in "The Mikado"), while Harry Grabiner, business manager of the White Sox, is director of ticket sales.

Listed among the patrons and patronesses is one name which will cause consternatoin in many a tender bosom. There it stands: "Mrs. Eames MacVeagh!" And he never told a soul!

Princess Cantacuzene on "Russia."

Society turned out in full force last Tuesday night at the Palmer mansion, 1350 Lake Shore drive, to hear an address from the Princess Cantacuzene on the condition and needs of the Russian refugees. In vast throngs these refugees are collected at all the outlets of that afflicted country. They are the union and for freedom of the slaves. It was of incalculable aid to us at that moment. The admiral who commanded that Russian squadron is now, with his wife, both well over 80, and both in direst want, in Finland.

Such instances could be multiplied a thousand times and yet understate the hope of future Russia. Without aid most of them will perish.

MRS DAVID SCOTT

MRS. DONALD ROSS GREEN

Two of the prettiest brides of the month were Mrs. Donald Ross Green and Mrs. David Scott. The former was Miss Constance Winsor McLaughlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew C. McLaughlin of 5609 Woodlawn avenue. Her marriage to Donald Ross Green of Holyoke, Mass., took place on Feb. 14 at the Hyde Park Congregational church, the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey reading the service. Mrs. Scott was Miss Rachel Embree before her marriage on Feb. 1 to David Scott. She is the daughter of Mrs. Jessie R. Embree of Evanston, and Mr. Scott is the son of Mrs. Hugh M. Scott, also of Evanston. Their wedding took place in the First Methodist Episcopal church, the Rev. Charles M. Stuart, assisted by the Rev. Ernest F. Tittle, officiating.

The princess spoke extremely well, with much feeling, and held the attention of her audience to the end. A committee is to be formed here to coöperate with the national body of Russian relief workers to raise funds to be expended where most needed in Europe by such well organized working agencies as the Hoover committees and the Red Cross agencies.

In many districts, with a little aid, the refugees become self-supporting. Men and women who were brought up in luxury, with no experience in work, are doing the most lowly tasks, glad of an opportunity to earn enough for the simple food which is all they can secure in those stricken lands adjacent to Russia. A former neighbor of the princess' in the Crimea, a "grande dame," who was the lady bountiful of that district, is now in Serbia, with her daughter and granddaughter, having lost both husband and son in the revolution. She is over 60. She wrote asking for aid. In acknowledging the receipt of some money she said that she did not need any more because she had got some sewing to do, while her daughter and granddaughter were both doing domestic work in Serbian households.

Students of our civil war will remember when at a critical moment for the north the Russian fleet sailed into the harbor of San Francisco and, by so doing, proclaimed to a world far from friendly to us that Russia was on the side of those who were fighting for conditions over there. The princess returned yesterday to New York, where she devotes herself to her relief work.

It is an interesting though quite irrelevant question, as to what is the exact status of our representative to Russia, Ambassador Francis, who is now at his home in St. Louis. Is he still ambassador? And is he still receiving the salary of an ambassador? If so, what is he doing in the representing line?

Stay at Homes Rewarded.

With a weather record which on the 17th of the month was 469 degrees in excess of normal, a record gained since Jan. 1, it is hard not to say something about the remarkable season which has so far justified those mangy squirrels who last September refused to grow bushy coats in preparation for the cold season. How they knew what was ahead of them is one of those so far unsolvable problems which continue to make life interesting. When we shall know the answer to all nature's secrets there will be nothing more worth while in this mortal existence. Like Alexander of old, we shall cry in our ennui, "Alas, there are no more worlds to conquer!"

But from the winter resorts of the west and the south there arise cries of extreme distress. The hotels and casinos are half empty. The comparatively few travelers who are there write of the cold and rains of southern California. The railways are carrying few passengers, and all business which depends on the so-called idle rich is semi-paralyzed. The high prices for travel are reaping what they sowed in last year's season, when the wandering public was plucked and left lean, and went home thinking.

The radiant, warm days and star spangled nights of January and February in Chicago have been the unexpected reward of those who stayed at home this winter. To be sure, March and April are still ahead of us. Do you remember last Easter Sunday's snowstorm?

Among those who are not going to trust to March and April for weather is Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, who is planning a trip to China. She is going to New York with her daughter, Mrs. George H. Clark, next week. Shortly after her return here ten days later she will depart with her son-in-law, George W. Patterson, for Japan and China.

The latter, who lost his wife a few weeks ago (the lovely Suzette Ryerson Patterson), has signed a contract with a publishing company for two years' research work in China. Mrs. Ryerson is accompanying him to Pekin, and will stay in China until June, when she will return by the Canadian Rockies route, visiting Banff and Lake Louise on her way home.

Her son, John Ryerson, and W. E. D. Stokes Jr. will occupy the Ryerson home, 2700 Lake View avenue, during her absence. "Jack" Ryerson is organizing a racquet club, and is building a squash court in the wing of the family residence. It will be a most up to date affair, with adjacent bath and shower, and an outside stairway leading to it.

There are few private squash courts in the city. Such a court takes up a good deal of space and, except in unusual conditions, does not fit into the average modern city dwelling. Mrs. William G. Hibbard of Winnetka has a squash court in her garden, adjacent to her fine tennis court. Both of these are favorite rendezvous for the youth of the community.

Series of Lenten Lectures.

At this Lenten season, while the body is being chastised by fasting and prayer, the mind is not neglected. There are many interesting lecture courses planned. A series of talks gotten up by the alumnæ of Bryn Mawr and Vassar begins tomorrow at the residence of Mrs. Frederick Countiss, 1530 Lake Shore drive, when Dr. Frank Gunsaulus, one of the most eloquent men in this part of the country, will deliver the first of three lectures on Persian art and especially Persian potteries. He has made a great study of these subjects, as proven by the fine collection at the Art institute of Persian pottery which he gathered and which bears his name.

The subject of the first talk is "The Near East: The Highway of Old World Culture and Mysticism." The other two will be on "The Potter's Art: Through Luster and Persian Blue" and "Persian Painting." These will be given at Fullerton hall and will be illustrated with colored lantern slides. The course is open to all interested in the subjects.

There are 250 Vassar and 150 Bryn Mawr alumnæ here, among whom are (Vassarites) Mmes. Morris Johnston Jr., Lawrence Houghteling, and Hugh M. Johnston and (Bryn Mawrites) Mmes. Chauncey Borland, William H. Bush, and Eugene Talbot.

Another course of lectures of value and interest is that one being organized by the officers of the woman's board of St. Luke's hospital, of which Mrs. William Baum is president, Mrs. John Borden first vice president, Mrs. C. B. Borland second vice president, Mrs. John De Koven third vice president, Mrs. Frank Walls recording secretary, Miss Helen Carted corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Frank Cowgill treasurer. The first of this course will be a talk from Prof. James Breasted of the University of Chicago, who is the great authority on Egyptology and also on oriental lands, languages, and literature. This will be delivered on Tuesday afternoon, March 8, at 3:30 in the ballroom of the Blackstone hotel.

The second lecture will be from Horace Bridges on "The Education of Henry Adams—A Spiritual Failure and Its Cause." This will be given at Miss Ethel Wrenn's residence, 1500 Astor street.

Last Speaker in Holy Week.

The same speaker will also deliver the third of the series at the residence of Mrs. Frederick Countiss on the subject of "Thomas à Kempis: The Flower of the Contemplative Life." As this last will be given in Holy Week it will be appropriate to the spirit of the season. Mr. Bridges is one of the most inspiring and cultivated of the preachers and thinkers of the time in Chicago, in a measure taking the place of the late Prof. David Swing. He speaks every Sunday to the Chicago Ethical society at the Fine Arts theater.

The proceeds of these lectures will go to the fund the women's committee raises each year for some of the hospital's many needs.

Mrs. Hamilton McCormick has organized her social committee at the Chicago Historical society, so that it functions well and devotedly. At the Washington's birthday celebration by the society next Tuesday evening at 8:15, when Eugene E. Prussing will talk on "Washington: In Life and Love," she will be assisted in receiving by the Mmes. Henry Robbins, John De Koven, Clifford Arrick, Peter Dudley, R. H. McCormick, Charles B. Pike, Laurence Armour, and J. J. Borland.

Many people are attracted daily to the society's rooms by the interesting Gunther collection. When the society is in a position to acquire a new home it is to be hoped that it will find one in some central spot, so that it can be the object of pilgrimage to thousands. As a means of Americanizing our foreign population it has great potential value. Go to see it yourself. You'll be surprised at its exhibits.

Give Card Party at Auditorium for St. Joseph's Home

By Kate Webber.

NUMEROUS little fellers who need friends early in life will be the beneficiaries of a card party to be given on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Auditorium hotel for the maintenance of St. Joseph's Home for the Friendless. Mrs. Frank Healy is president of the organization which works for the children, Mrs. Genevieve Wilkin is treasurer, and Mrs. William T. Joslyn is chairman of the card party.

Situated on the southeast side of the city, St. Joseph's home practically every day receives into its fold several little tots to whom the word friendless already has too tragic a meaning. The building has housed many unfortunates since its erection in the early sixties. Used first as a home for retired civil war veterans and their families, the memories of that struggle still linger about the spot of its location. Just a few steps across the street lie the remains of Stephen A. Douglas, orator and statesman, and from the northern windows may be seen the statue by Leonard Volk.

The main building and the annex, the latter erected in 1913, provide bright, sunny rooms for work and sleep and play, and there is provision also for illness and contagion.

Because of the fact that the stay of the children is only temporary, it is difficult to maintain a regular school system. In spite of this transiency an effort is made to continue the regular school work while the children are in the home. Class work is practically impossible, since children come from widely separated districts. They must have individual attention, that the instructors may cope with the stage each pupil has reached in his studies.

The home is free to all applicants, and the length of time of each inmate is governed by circumstances. It is simply a temporary refuge for destitute women and children, a place in which they may receive shelter until some permanent arrangement is made for their care.

Provision is made for five classes of applicants; first, mothers with young babies, who have been abandoned or left destitute; second, women and young girls without protection; third, women and girls who are traveling and find themselves without friends or money; fourth, children who are neglected or abandoned by parents or guardians; and fifth, children whose mothers are ill and whose fathers' resources are insufficient to provide the necessary care. All of these cases are cared for until satisfactory arrangements can be made elsewhere. Thus the home tides hapless individuals over times of stress when they might otherwise suffer great hardship.

MRS. FRANK HEALY

MRS. CHARLES S. CLARK

The annual card party for the benefit of St. Joseph's Home for the Friendless will be given on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Auditorium hotel. Mrs. Frank Healy is president of the woman's auxiliary which has the affair in charge.

Mrs. Charles S. Clark is in charge of a pageant of literature to be given tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Englewood Woman's club. Two hundred members and friends will take part in the pageant, which will depict the various ages of man, from babyhood to old age. The last group will be represented by several old people who are awaiting admission to the Oakhaven Old People's home, to be erected at Western avenue and One Hundred and Thirteenth place.

DOWNTOWN CLUBS

The Chicago Woman's club will hold a business meeting next Wednesday at 2 o'clock in Recital hall. Tomorrow at 2:15 o'clock the philosophy and science department study class will meet—the subject to be "Medieval Philosophy," and the speakers Mrs. Hugh L. Griffin, Mrs. Harry H. Lobdell, Mrs. R. F. Peyton, and Mrs. H. S. Rockwell. The French study class will present a patriotic program Tuesday at 1 o'clock, in Recital hall. Lieut. F. L. Schoell will give an illustrated lecture on the reconstruction of Reims. Mrs. Harry Channon will preside on Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock when the literary study class will meet to hear Mrs. John Cuyler's paper on "Youth and Age." The English study class will meet Thursday morning at 10:30 o'clock. The Sunday Open Door program for this afternoon at 3 o'clock will be an illustrated lecture on the Rhine by Frank Dudley.

Tomorrow at 10:30 o'clock the board of directors and the chairmen of the various committees of the Woman's City club will meet. At 2:30 o'clock the monthly club meeting will be held in the theater. Miss Edith Rockwood will speak on "The County's 1921 Income; How Shall We Spend It?" Miss Harriet Vittum will preside, and Michael Reese, former of Cook county hospital will make a brief talk. C. A. Dykstra will discuss the Tuesday citizenship class topic, "City Legislation Under Considera-tion." There will be a meeting of the committee on social relations on Tuesday at 2:30 o'clock. The Passion Play Is Attempted by a Cast in Hoboken drama in a convent near Los Angeles.

Enter the devil. An ex-newspaper man offered to press agent the spectacle, and the tourists and the money began to roll in. Presently the project collapsed. The California play went out of existence. The newspaper man came east. Seven years ago he suggested the passion play to the West Hoboken congregation. The first performance was attended with publicity a Shubert might envy. No plays run through Lent—forty days—with sold out houses at $1.50 a seat for every performance. A rival passion play has sprung up within a mile of the West Hoboken church and does as well.

If the Messrs. Shubert read this they will want to stage a passion play. That would not be nice. But it could be done nicely, for instance, by Winthrop Ames, whose soul has been whitened by many decent failures. The Gideons spend a great deal of money advertising the Bible. There is now on Broadway a pastor of a church who advertises the cross—most intimate relic of the Christian epic—in electric lights. John D. Rockefeller Jr. has presided at and paid for Christian propaganda lectures which were clumsily patterned after the peep shows of county fairs.

Would all these gentlemen howl protest if a Christus play were put into a regular theater for a season's run? Certainly many of the unregenerate would pay their $3.30 to hear the Beatitudes from the lips of a Barrymore, and certainly some of them would come out of the playhouse regenerate.

While Hoboken offered Manhattan a reason for crossing the Hudson westward, Manhattan offered Hoboken three excellent reasons for staying at home. They are "The Rose Girl," a musical comedy, which is neither comic nor musical, at the new Ambassador theater; a half-hearted revival of "Peg o' My Heart," with Laurette Taylor at the Cort, and a problem play of the aging woman's mind and matter named "The White Villa," which plays special matinées at the Eltinge.

Miss Taylor at the opening performance of her revival of "Peg," explained a certain lack of enthusiasm which pervaded the evening in a speech into which she put her whole heart and her foot. "Lawyers made me do this revival," said Miss Taylor, frankly, to her audience. "I didn't want to revive 'Peg,' which was done, I thought, perfectly eight years ago, when I created the part. But they told me I had to do it—and—and—"

Here Miss Taylor's under lip began to tremble threateningly. Here also the curtain was suddenly dropped, just grazing the tip of Miss Taylor's pretty nose. During the few seconds which followed the first night audience buzzed comment on the incident and remembered that there had been litigation and dispute when Miss Taylor left her rôle suddenly after the thousand and someth performance five years ago. Then the curtain went up again and Miss Taylor continued without further reference to the hard hearted lawyers who have forced her to do what she doesn't want to do.

Obviously Miss Taylor has accepted the revival of "Peg" as distasteful labor, but she labors loyally. Everything of the original "Peg" is there but the spirit. That has been dropped somewhere in the gulf of intervening years. The dog Michael of the first production was brought out of the dignified retirement of old age to revive his important rôle of canine ingenue. Michael, retaining the spirit, or its lack, of this performance, yawned mightily throughout the evening.

But the audience did not yawn. There have been so many poor evenings in the theater that audiences have become humble. This one was cheerfully grateful for the crumb from the banquet of innocent merriment that was once "Peg." We had the curious spectacle of actors bored to death and audience amused to cheers.

"The Rose Girl" is our old flame, the girl in red, or yellow, or blue, or pink. Dr. Anselm Goetzl has composed a score full of respectful allusions to all the girl scores of all time. The Shuberts have spiced the production with a quantity of hired comedy. At the signal of the first curtain rise a host of expensive actors rushed onto the stage and began to work industriously. Mabel Withee, the chirping darling of many musical comedies, chirped as tirelessly and nearly as tiresomely as birds in the morning.

Zoe Barnett of the wicked twisty voice labored with a copious quantity of vamping. Comedians cracked already crumbled witticisms. The librettist had been generous to all the remembered musical comedies. His name was inscribed on the programs. But it is possible that the whole thing was done on an adding machine. The gowns were pretty. But it was all adding machine and sewing machine. As for old Doc Goetzl, he is, in this score, a muzak machine.

"The White Villa" is Edith Ellis' dramatization of the psycho-physiological material contained in Karen Michaelis' book, "The Dangerous Age," which frightened a great number of middle aged woman several years ago when it first pronounced the thesis that the woman of 40 is temporarily demented.

As the play is constructed it is a huge practical joke on its central character, who obeys a submerged impulse of her fortieth year, and leaves her husband. In the "White Villa" the tragic-comedy of her gradual separation from human society is played. There, in solitude, she comes to recognize the small but concrete value of the male. And, when her cook summarizes her growing convictions in the homely phrase, "men aren't much, it's true, but then—there isn't anything else," she summons the man she believes she still can hold with the remnants of her charm, only to find that they have profited by her absence from the haunts of society to pick themselves new darlings, much younger than herself.

In crude phrase, the moral of the tale is "unless you have another roped—stick to the man you've got." It is, you see, for women only, and I don't know why I am writing a word about it.

Sample Garments from the Fashion Show

ON SALE MONDAY

A rare opportunity for the discriminating woman is this sale of exclusive spring fashions at popular prices. We consider ourselves very fortunate in securing for our patrons these

Dresses, Wraps, and Suits of Distinctive Style and Quality

This sale of designers' samples will be even more successful than the one which we held last year after the close of the Fashion Show.

These models are limited in number and there are only one or two of a kind. The materials are those most favored for spring.

One of the newest spring creations—a hand embroidered wrap of the finest Marvella cloth, trim'd with deep fringe.

The Feet of Mercury

See how they bend and point for the dive! How straight the toes, how high raised the arch, how the whole foot flexes and curves with the spirit of joyous motion.

Well may the modern woman envy this ancient god the beauty of his feet. Such perfection has now disappeared almost completely—due to the mischievous effects of the stiff, soled shoes. Fallen arches, cramped and misshapen toes—these are the common deformities of 85% of the women of today.

But there is still a way to preserve the natural beauty of the foot. Wear Cantilever Shoes. They hug the arch and support it. The flexible shank encourages the muscles to exercise and strengthen, thus correcting and preventing flat feet. The Natural inner sole-line keeps the toes pointing straight ahead, as Nature meant that they should. Widths AAAAA to EE. Write for booklet.

MUSIC

Program Out for North Shore Music Festival in May

By Ruth Miller

WHAT is more commendable than forehandedness? Here it is February the 20th, and the management of the Chicago North Shore Music festival has sent out a long and imposing announcement of the complete plans for the thirteenth festival, which is scheduled this year for the week of May 24.

Among the listed soloists we find that the feminine vocalists come in pairs. There are two sopranos, Florence Macbeth, who did her best work this season with the Chicago Opera company as Gilda in "Rigoletto" and the doll in "The Tales of Hoffmann," and Marie Sundelius of the Metropolitan opera. Contraltos we have two—Margaret Matzenauer of the Metropolitan and Merle Alcock.

Three mighty singers are the tenors: Charles Marshall, who was caught from obscurity and hurled overnight into the hard, white hot glare of the operatic calcium by a spectacular performance of Otello last season, will make his only concert appearance in Chicago this spring on the sixth and last program of the festival. Orville Harold and Lambert Murphy, both of the Metropolitan opera, comprise the second and third members of this tenor trio. There is one lone baritone and one bass, Theodore Harrison and Arthur Middleton respectively.

The only instrumentalist announced as soloist is Percy Grainger, pianist, who will play the Tschaikowsky "Concerto No. 1" and a group of his own compositions at the third concert, May 21.

There will be two orchestras, it being the present policy of the management to have two symphony organizations appearing at each festival in future years. The New York Philharmonic, Joseph Stransky, conductor, with Margaret Matzenauer as soloist, will furnish the entire program of the first concert and at the same time make its initial bow at these festivals. The Chicago Symphony orchestra, Frederick Stock, conductor, will provide the orchestral numbers and accompaniments for the other five concerts.

The children's chorus of 1,500 voices under the direction of Osbourne McConathy will give a group of miscellaneous songs and the children's cantata "An Island Fable," by Webbe, at the Saturday matinée.

The fifth concert, devoted to Bach's passion music (St. Matthew), will occupy the afternoon and evening of Memorial day. It will enlist the services of the festival chorus of 600 singers, augmented by a vested choir of 300 boys from the Episcopal churches of Chicago and the north shore, the Chicago Symphony orchestra, the A. Cappella choir of Northwestern university, and five soloists. Peter C. Lutkin will conduct.

Frederick Stock of the Chicago orchestra has written a new choral work, "A Psalmodic Rhapsody," specially for the 1921 festival and dedicated it to the North Shore Festival association. It will receive its first performance at the second concert, with the composer on the dais. Mr. Stock's composition will occupy the first half of the program. The second half will be devoted to Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast."

A mastodonic affair, this festival. Its soloists are written in headlines among the musically sensational. Its orchestras are the two most powerful symphonic machines in the country. Its singers are legion. Its very bigness augure well for its success.

Charles H. Gabriel Jr., expert newspaper man and excellent musician, has published five new songs titled "Little Lad," "How Can I Forget Thee?", "In a Gondola," "The Kiss Refused," and "Behest." Mr. Gabriel understands the voice thoroughly and therefore writes for it intelligently. He has a distinct gift for melodic line and the ability to infuse into his charming tunes the exact character and atmosphere of each individual verse.

There is a sly elfin coquetry in "The Kiss Refused," translated from the Japanese by the composer. Another translation, an Afghanistan love song from the Puchto, has the typical pulse and whine of the oriental. His setting of Robert Browning's "In a Gondola" is as gracefully exquisite as the exotic lines of the poet. There is a refreshing innocence about his "Little Lad," a simplicity, a naïve directness, and a harmonic reticence that suits Thomas S. Jones' verse. It is, all told, a group of songs possessed of that rare musical attribute, the infinite charm of variety.

THE MUSIC CALENDAR

Today at 3:30—Anita Malkin, 8 year old daughter of the principal of the violoncello section of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, will be heard in a violin recital in Orchestra hall under the direction of Wessels & Voegeli. Miss Malkin is the young miss who appeared as soloist in the children's concerts by the orchestra both last season and this. Her program for today includes the Bach "Concerto No. 1 in A Minor," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," Kreisler's arrangement of Francoeur's "Rigaudon," Vieuxtemps' "Ballade and Polonaise," Neruda's "Berceuse Slave," and Kreisler's "Schön Rosmarin." L. Benditzky will be at the piano.

Today at 3:30—Josef Lhevinne, pianist, will be heard in recital at Cohan's Grand under the direction of F. Wight Neumann. The program will contain a novelty in the Rachmaninoff "Second Suite" for two pianos, the second piano part being played by Mrs. Josef Lhevinne. The program includes Rubinstein's "Prelude and Fugue," A flat major, op. 53; "Nocturne," op. 109; "Prelude," F minor, op. 24, and Brahms' "Paganini Variations."

Tonight at 7:45—At the Sunday Evening club the choir under the direction of Edgar Nelson will sing "Blessed Be Thou," by Matthews; "Even Me," by Warren, with Gustaf Holmquist in the solo part, and "The Woods and Every Sweet Smelling Tree," by West, with John B. Miller in the solor part. "O, for a Closer Walk with God," by McDuffee, will be sung by Mrs. Mabel Sharp Herdien.

Monday at 8:15—Mischa Levitzki in piano recital in Orchestra hall, under the direction of Wessels and Voegeli, announced as his last appearance here for two seasons. His program includes the Bach-Tausig "Organ Toccata and Fugue in D Minor," the Gluck-Brahms "Gavotte," Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," opus 57; a group of Chopin, Dohnanyi's "Music of the Spheres," Scriabin's "Etude in D Sharp Minor," Tschaikowsky's "Troika en traineaux," and the Paganini-Liszt "La Campanella."

Tuesday at 8:15—Maria Gerdes, pianist, a newcomer to Chicago, will be heard for the first time in recital at Kimball hall. The program will contain the Liszt "Concerto Pathetique" for two pianos, the second piano being played by Edith Gerdes. The program complete is as follows: "Sonata Op. 27, C Sharp Minor," by Beethoven, and a Chopin group.

Thursday at 8:15—Popular concert by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, Frederick Stock conductor, in Orchestra hall. Program: Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor," Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture, Grainger's "Molly on the Shore," Glazounow's "Concert Waltz No. 2 in F Major," and Sibelius' "Finlandia."

Thursday at 8:15—Augusta Cottlow will be heard in piano recital at Kimball hall under the direction of F. Wight Neumann. The program includes "Toccata, C Major," for the organ, by Bach-Busoni; "Carnival," op. 9, by Schumann; "Of Br'er Rabbit," "Nautilus," "Danse Andalouse," by MacDowell; "Polonaise, E Major," by Liszt.

Friday at 2:15—The Chicago Symphony orchestra, Frederick Stock conductor, in weekly subscription concert at Orchestra hall. The soloist is Miss Isolde Menges, violinist, who will play the Bruch "Concerto for Violin No. 1 in G Minor." Other numbers on the program are Handel's "Concerto in F Major," Balakirew's "Symphony in C Major," and Schumann's overture "In Spring."

Saturday at 11—The Elschuco Trio will appear in concert in the Orchestra hall foyer under the direction of the Musical Guild of Illinois. Their program is comprised of the Schubert "E flat Trio," Arensky's "D minor Trio Andante" from Lekeu's "C Minor Trio," and Scherzo from Andrae's F minor Trio.

Saturday at 8:15—Chicago Symphony orchestra in Orchestra hall; repetition of the Friday afternoon program.

Music Prizes Offered to Young Americans

THE National Federation of Music Clubs, of which the Illinois State Federation of Music clubs is a component part, has announced its annual contest for young artists. The terms of the competition, as made known by [illegible] Illinois State Federation, are as follows:

The contest is open to pianists, violinists and women. Voice contestants must be between the ages of [illegible] those for piano and violin between 18 and 30. All contestants must have been trained in the United States.

The contest will be held in Chicago between April 1 and 15. This will be followed by a district contest, and the competition will culminate in the national contest to be held at Moline, Ill., June 8 to 16.

Illinois applications should be made before March 25 to the state chairman of contests, Mrs. Louis E. Yager, 300 Forest avenue, Oak Park. The registration fee is one dollar. Contestants must have the indorsement of three recognized musicians as to their musical attainments, and must present a program chosen from the list prescribed by the national federation. Copies of this list are obtainable from Mrs. Yager.

The prizes to be awarded to the national winners are as follows:

A cash prize of $150 to each.

A concert tour for which each will receive $50 a performance.

A joint recital in Aeolian hall, New York City.

A joint recital in Kimball hall, Chicago, under the direction of F. Wight Neumann.

A joint appearance at the Lockport music festival, for which the winners will receive $50 each.

The Piano club of Chicago will award a cash prize of $50 to each of the Illinois state winners.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Village Church or Cathedral Should Inspire Peace

By Rev. Gardner MacWhorter.

"THERE are churches in which, as we enter, we seem pervaded by an atmosphere of calm and peace as in a garden at sunset; the cares, frets, and worries of life slip away from us in the hush and the silence; the mere material things fade into nothingness, and all that is finest and best in us dominates us, inspires us, and for the time at least, regenerates us and makes noble living seem not only reality—a new privilege. We see life in a truer perspective, we have a new sense of value, a new communion with the infinite. There may be no preacher present, yet we feel the glowing inspiration of the place itself.

"It may come to us in some great cathedral or in some simple village church. It is not a matter of mere architecture or of furnishings, but of these in union combined to express the spirituality that should permeate the worshipper.

"The spirit that should inspire a church is typified by its stained glass windows, which shut out the world yet fill the church itself with light. It is a place set apart, wherein one may leave the world for a little while to seek guidance and strength to live in the world.

"The spirit of a church building in all its parts and their relation to each other should be that of unity, oneness of purpose, to produce an atmosphere of spirituality and of communion with what is highest in man, his instinct of worship.

"The spirit of a church building should be that of genuineness, sincerity, truth. If it is to stand for truth it should manifest truth. No matter how simple the materials, they should be exactly what they seem to be. Harmony should speak in all the details.

"If the church, as a body of people, is seeking in religion, harmony between this world and a world to come, harmony between a belief and a living of that belief, harmony between what they are and what they desire to be, then let the church, as a mere building, express that harmony. In some subtle way, while the worshipper himself may be wholly unconscious of it, this harmonious sense will have its sway over his thoughts and his emotions; it is part of the true spirit of the church, finding expression in the building itself, that is inspiring him, without his knowing."—From St. Luke's Parish Visitor, Evanston.

Lenten services are being conducted every Thursday evening in the First Methodist church of Evanston by the pastor, the Rev. Ernest F. Tittle, D. D., and during holy week special musical programs will be given on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of the week.

The Rev. T. A. O'MALLEY. GIBSON SYKES POWLER PHOTO.

The Rev. Thomas A. O'Malley, S. J., will conduct a retreat for men in St. Ignatius' church, Loyola and Glenwood avenues, beginning this evening at 8 o'clock and continuing through the week until next Sunday evening. Father O'Malley, a member of the Society of Jesus for the last forty years and a mission priest of the order for seven years, was formerly an assistant in St. Ignatius' parish, Chicago, and is now the pastor of St. Aloysius' church, Kansas City, Mo.

The annual assembly of the Chicago Church federation will take place tomorrow at Association auditorium, 19 South La Salle street, with an afternoon session at 2:30 o'clock and an evening session at 7:45 o'clock. The general theme is "Child Welfare," and the speakers will be Miss Jane Addams, Miss Grace Abbott, Wilfred S. Reynolds, Judge Victor P. Arnold, the Rev. Theodore G. Soares, D. D., and the Rev. Ira W. Allen, D. D.

"Church Federation Sunday" will be observed next Sunday by fourteen of the Christian communions having churches in Chicago, 600 congregations numbering more than 180,000 persons, included in the church federation, which is a member of the federal council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Judge Ninian H. Welch will address the Ravenswood Sunday Evening club tonight on "George Washington" at the Ravenswood Congregational church. Next Sunday evening the club will have an illustrated lecture on "The Oberammergau Passion Play," by Dr. Abel M. White, and on March 6 the Oriental Consistory quartet will sing, and the pastor, the Rev. J. M. Thomas, D. D., will speak on "The Mission of Music."

Holy week, the week of preparation for Easter day, March 27, extends from Palm Sunday, March 20, to Easter even, Saturday, March 26.

Special Lenten services will be conducted by the Missouri synod, Lutheran church, in Woods theater during holy week at noon each day. The speakers will be the Rev. E. E. Eckhardt of Pittsburgh and Prof. Paul Romoser of the Bronxville Lutheran college, New York.

The Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., LL. D., bishop of Chicago, will be the Lenten noon day service preacher at the Garrick theater during Holy week at the services being held every day except Saturday and Sunday during Lent under the auspices of the Episcopal Church club of Chicago.

An address on "George Washington" will be delivered this evening at 8 o'clock by James Edgar Brown in the Sheridan Road Methodist church.

Dr. Cleland B. McAfee of McCormick Theological seminary will give a series of talks at the 7 o'clock meeting of the Sunday Evening club on the general subject, "Paul in City Life." Beginning today with "Paul in Damascus," Dr. McAfee will take for the succeeding Sundays up to and including April 10, Paul in Antioch, in Athens, in Ephesus, Corinth, Jerusalem, and Rome.

Ninth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago announces a lecture on Christian Science by John W. Doorly, C. S. B., of London, on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in the church edifice, Woodlawn avenue and East Sixty-second street.

Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago also announces a lecture on Christian Science by Mr. Doorly on Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the church edifice, 4840-50 Dorchester avenue.

Mr. Doorly is a member of the board of lectureship of The Mother Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

Two popular courses in religious education led by Dr. J. A. Jenkins, president of the Union Theological college, and Mrs. Hawley Olmstead will be offered at the west side branch of the Y. W. C. A., 101 South Ashland boulevard, on ten consecutive Monday evenings, beginning tomorrow. Mrs. Olmstead's class will meet from 7 to 7:45 o'clock for a study of comparative religions, under the title of "Faiths of Mankind"; Dr. Jenkins' class from 8 to 8:45, on "Christian Fundamentals." During the last year more than 800 girls and women have enrolled in Bible classes and religious discussion groups in the various branches of the Chicago Y. W. C. A., and attendance at religious meetings has passed the 10,000 mark.

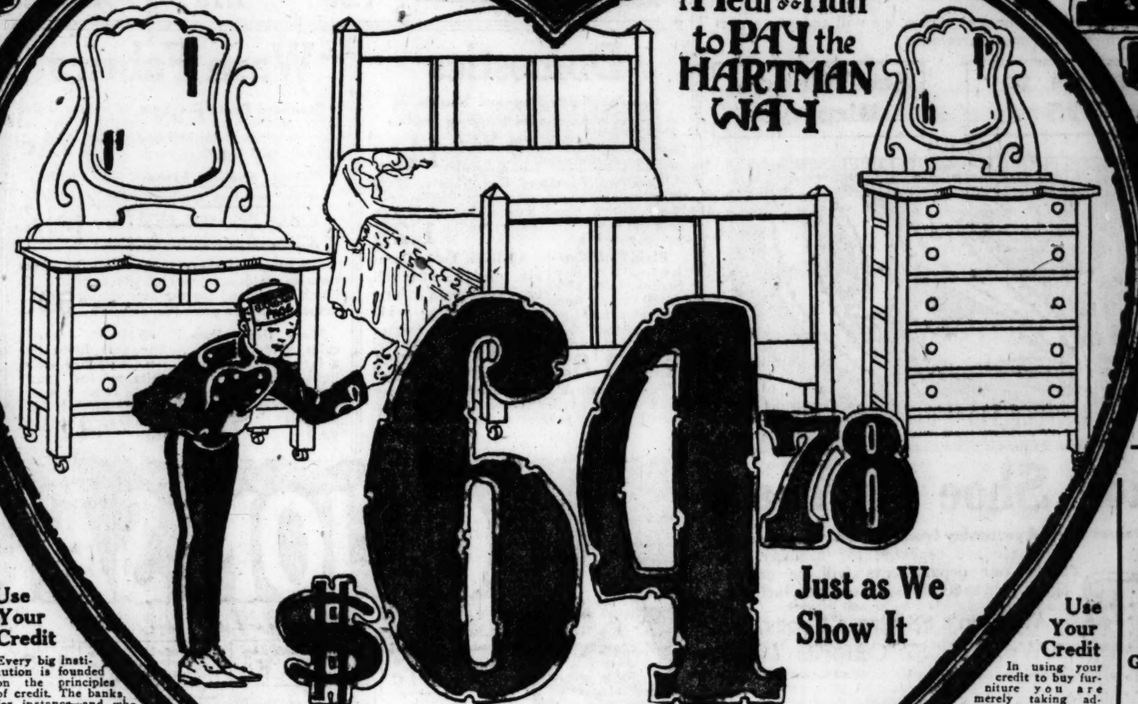
Price Smashed + Double Value for Your Dollar

The Mid-Winter SALE ENDS This Week

Reductions of 20% to 60% prevail on every article of furniture on display at Hartman's. It makes no difference what you need, you'll find it at a bargain price that makes your dollars do double duty. And don't forget that Your Credit Is Good at Hartman's. A Year and a Half to Pay the Hartman Way. No Red Tape. No embarrassing questions.

A Year and a Half to PAY the HARTMAN WAY



$64.78

Just as We Show It

The Suite Complete

In pricing this Bedroom Suite we have practically taken your dollar bills and stretched them until they now have the buying power of two. Seeing is believing—see this golden oak finish Suite Bargain tomorrow. Each piece will win your approval. You won't resist buying, especially with Hartman's Easy Credit Terms at your command. Come Early.

Use Your Credit

Every big institution is founded on the principles of credit. The banks, for instance—and who can say that the banking business lacks dignity. If it is sensible and practical for a bank to use its credit, why shouldn't you buy furniture on credit?

This gigantic clearance sale ends This Week, so you must decide now to get into action. There is no need of your tolerating shabby or old fashioned furniture when your Credit makes it possible to take advantage of our liberal reductions. A small amount of cash insures immediate delivery. A Year and a Half to Pay the Bill—that's the Hartman Way.

Break Chest Colds with Red Peppers

EASE your tight, aching chest. Stop the pain. Break up the congestion. Feel a bad cold loosen up in just a short time.

"Red Pepper Rub" is the cold remedy that brings the quickest relief. It cannot hurt you and it certainly seems to end the tightness and drive the congestion and soreness right out.

When heat penetrates right down into colds, congestion, aching muscles and sore, stiff joints, relief comes at once.

Nothing has such concentrated, penetrating heat as red peppers. The moment you apply Red Pepper Rub for colds, backache, sore muscles, stiff neck, lumbago, or the pains of rheumatism or neuritis, you feel the tingling heat.

In three minutes the congested spot is warmed through and through. When you are suffering so you can hardly get about, just get a jar of Rowles Red Pepper Rub, made from red peppers, at any drug store. You will have the quickest relief known.

An Incomparable Sale of Dresses

Can you imagine every new dress whim of fashion for spring carried out in the most popular fabrics, offered at such a low price?

That is just what we are doing, and we want you here to convince yourself that this is the greatest value-giving event we have known.

The dresses are all we claim for them; the values cannot be beaten. They suggest spring in every line—in the ruffly, pleated and beaded effects, in the dainty trimmings, beautiful colorings and soft materials. To try one on is to covet it at once and perhaps choose another.

The materials are Canton Crepe, Taffeta, Charmeuse, Satins and Georgette. The colorings are pearl gray, new tans, dark copenhagen, navy, rust and many others. Also handsome combinations.

As there are but 500, we advise early shopping for best selections, although you'll not find an undesirable dress in the lot.

Because of the unusual values, we will accept no partial payment and hold garments.

"Twelve o'Clock! And All's Yell!"

PROLOGUE.

Babies are the young of the human, in some respects, perhaps, race. They are born without any sense and some of them never outgrow it. Hence they are said to resemble their parents. They also resemble flivvers, in so far as nearly everybody gets one, sooner or later; they require plenty of oil, water, and air; they never come fully equipped; they usually have a rattle, and it isn't the original cost, it's the upkeep. With these few vague, general, and totally inadequate remarks, we lope gracefully into the OVERTURE.

When the pink primordial pride and joy
Of our antediluvian hoi polloi
A gastronomical pang obtained,
The poor little primitive brat was brained.
No medical visitants came to call—
They let him holler and squawk and squall,
Till the piqued preadamite père uprose
And handed his progeny one on the nose.

Today should the infantile pride and pet
A pain in him's poor little tummykins get,
It's "This side up," and "Handle with care,"
While doctors are summoned from everywhere.
They hurry with boluses, potions, and pills,
Sedative lotions (and mountainous bills),
While father, who carries the bellering kid,
Longs to do as the caveman did.

SCENE I.—PA POTTER'S BEDROOM.

(It is about midnight, and Baby Potter is lying in his bed wide awake wondering if the pain in his stomach is worth hollering about. He finally decides it is.)

BABY.: Wow—Wow—Wow—Wow!

PA (sleepily):
What's all the row—what is it now?

MA (wide awake):
He must be sick. O, what is it, dear?

BABY (with revived vigor):
Wow—Wow!

MA (rising):
O, Pa, hurry here.
The poor child is suffering terrible pain.
You must have been feeding him something again.

It was about midnight.

PA: I must have been feeding him? It's always the same.
The baby gets sick and you're never to blame.
Whenever it's sick some one else must have fed it—
Whenever it's healthy you take all the credit.

BABY: Wow—Wow!

MA: O, wattle I do?
I think I should call up a doctor, don't you?

"When I was a kid d'ye know what Ma did?"

PA: Why call a doctor? You surely should know
How to fix up a baby. . . . Why spend all that dough?
My mother had ten, and she raised all of us
With half your expense and your stewing and fuss.

MA: Your ma always said that you fell out of bed
When you was a child . . . did you fall on your head?

BABY: Wow—Wow!

MA: The poor little child.

PA: Poor little rats . . . he's driving me wild.

MA.: Too bad about you . . . get up out of bed
And get some hot water . . . here, hold up his head.
No, hold up his arms . . . hot water, I said.
Turn on some more light . . . no, pull down the blind.
No, hold up his head——

PA: Hey, make up your mind.

MA: Go call Doctor Grady . . . no, get Doctor Black.
Y'think Lydston's better? Go call him . . . come back;
We ought to get Horner or Latimer, say,
Or Lewis . . . or Daggett . . . what's keeping you, eh?

BABY: Wow—Wow!

PA: It's easy to see
He don't need a doctor . . . just give him to me;
I'll walk with the squealer and maybe he'll snooze.

(Walks out into living room with baby.)

I shouldn't be walking around without shoes.
(Crash . . . blam!) WHO PUT THAT CHAIR THERE?
Blankety Blank the Blank Blankety Chair.

MA: Because the child's sick, that's no reason to swear.
I'm trying to sleep . . . keep quiet out there.

(Mutterings may be heard from the living room, words that sound ominously like sam and lamb and jam, also well and bell and swell; but we fear that the monosyllables being used are none of these. . . . But, hark, the baby is not taking any part in these verbal pyrotechnics. . . . Has he forgotten about his stomach ache and gone to sleep? He has. Babies are like that.)

PA (re-enters with baby asleep):
Here, put him to bed . . . I'm dead on my feet.
Next time you should watch what you give him to eat.

MA: Next time I should watch . . . well, isn't that nice!
Whenever I need it I'll ask your advice.
You're always the one that is slipping him stuff
And saying I don't feed the darling enough.

PA (louder):
You don't! And that't true.

MA (louder):
I say that I do.

PA: When I was a kid
D'ye know what Ma did?

MA (louder):
Don't always be throwing your ma up to me.
She wasn't so wonderful, far as I see.

(Baby is stirring in his bed. Will he wake up and start all over again? He probably will.)

"Who put that chair there?"

"It's easy to see he don't need a doctor."

PA (still louder):
You can't say nothing against my Ma . . .

BABY: Wow—Wow—Baw—Baw!

MA: You woke up the child . . . are you satisfied now?

PA: I woke him? YOU woke him!

BABY: Wow—Wow—Baw—Baw!

(And Pa sorrowfully picks him up and the weary trudge begins again. An hour later he is asleep. This time Pa himself lays him down and crawls into bed, dead to the world. There is a hint of dawn in the grayness outside and Pa knows that he'll have to get up almost immediately. A night's sleep gone—Bang! just like that. Well, that's the way it is with babies. As Ma says: "A body often wonders if they're worth it. . . . They never realize what their parents go through for them until they grow up and have children of their own. But what does the Good Book say, 'No cross, no crown,' and besides, anyway, with all their faults, don't we love them still?" To which Pa fervently adds: "The stiller the better.")

(And that's that.)

Made from the white meat of coconuts and fat-freed milk

Here is your chance to try, free, a sweet, delicate nut butter churned from dainty nut fats and fat-freed milk.

You will like it as well as the finest butter, if you are a butter user, and the price far better. If you are now using some other brand of margarin, the deliciousness of Troco Nut Butter will be a surprise and a revelation. It's the finally perfected brand of nut butter.

Troco Nut Butter has the true flavor of gilt-edged butter, put in by a famous butter expert. It has the same food value.

But where the price of butter makes it a costly luxury and an excessive tax on the average pocket-book, Troco costs about half as much. You can usually buy two pounds of Troco Nut Butter to every one of butter.

This puts an end to skimping and saving—you can afford to use all you want. This means a richer diet as well as enjoyment at the table.

Fats in abundance are necessary to good health. You and your family suffer if you skimp on this most necessary food.

Made by Hoffman

A. E. Hoffman, for 30 years a butter maker, famous for the unusual sweetness and delicacy of his butter, supervises the making of Troco Nut Butter. He puts in the same wonderful flavor.

He churns it from fat-freed milk, twice pasteurized. He flavors it with the same scientifically ripened milk which made his butter famous for delicate flavor.

He works in the new Troco plant, built exclusively for the production of nut margarin. This plant provides him with every possible facility, laboratory and mechanical, for his exacting work.

With flavor superb, food value the highest, and price right, Troco Nut Butter finally solves the butter problem. Accept the gift pound we offer, and prove that we can't describe the goodness of Troco Nut Butter.

ART and ARCHITECTURE

Jacobean Room an Interesting Gift to Art Institute

By Eleanor Jewett.

THE first period room to be installed in the Art institute is the Jacobean room, a significant addition to the institute's permanent collections. The room was brought entire—walls, windows, ceiling, hearth—from an old castle in Wales, and presented to the museum in memory of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Buckingham, by the late Clarence Buckingham, the late Miss Lucy Maud Buckingham, and Miss Kate S. Buckingham.

In its rather somber beauty the room presents a vivid picture of this important period in the history of art. On the walls are hung portraits by Cranach, Maas, Ewert, and Porbus, each of which adds its personal quota to the atmosphere of the stately hall.

The pieces of furniture add each their message, too. It seems impossible that swaggering swordsmen did once swing their booted legs under those black planks, the massive table of a baron's taste. The room almost whispers aloud with tales of brave chivalry; the cawing of rooks in the tops of aged elms is almost heard through the stained windows. The spirit of old England is revived in a remarkable way in this room.

It is hoped that this is the beginning of a series of period rooms to be placed in the institute. Such rooms in which the spirit of the past lives are valuable in stimulating good taste in the community, as well as in affording suggestions to the designer.

Interesting figures have been given out by the Art institute as to its attendance during the last year. In January of 1920 there were 64,060 visitors; in January, 1921, there were 119,000 visitors. On Sunday, Feb. 6, 1921, there was an attendance of 15,800 persons.

Counting the students as they entered once a day, the total attendance for 1920 was 1,136,174 persons. Visitors alone totaled 1,002,597. In 1919 the total attendance was 1,040,000. The visitors to the Burnham and Ryerson libraries numbered 64,000 during the last year. These libraries contain some 14,000 volumes; 1,000 volumes have been accumulated during 1920.

The ordinary school attendance is estimated at 3,010 students. From Jan. 1, 1920, to Jan. 1, 1921, there was a registration of students numbering 4,267.

The largest gift to the Art institute in 1920 was the W. L. Mead trust fund of $95,000.

The institute has made a number of interesting purchases during the last year, the most important of these probably being eighteen paintings by contemporary French artists, and the complete collection of etchings and lithographs by Odilon Redon.

A new office has been instituted at the museum—that of office of controller. Clarence A. Hough has been appointed to it.

A new department of industrial art in jewelry and metal work has been started at the Art institute. James H. Winn is to be in charge of it. Only one other school in the country has a similar room. The Art institute department is equipped with the proper machines and all necessary working appliances. The Renaissance Woman's club has given $300 toward the equipment.

The Civic Industrial club of Chicago high schools will have charge of the details of "Better Design Week," March 12, in which all the art directors and art classes of the high schools and normal colleges will take part. The event occurs at the same time as the applied arts exhibit at the Art institute, and it is hoped that a serious interest will be aroused in the creation of design and its application to industrial arts.

"Ice-Bound Falls," by Ernest Lawson, has been bought by the Friends of American Art for the permanent collection hung in the Art institute. The painting was shown last year in the east and won the Temple gold medal of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

By invitation of the Societe de Aristes Français, and in collaboration with the French Department of Fine Arts, there will be held an exhibition of American architecture in the Salon des Aristes Français in Paris, opening on May 1 and continuing for about two months. Architects desiring to exhibit drawings or photographs may communicate with Julian Clarence Levi, 105 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Under the direction of the installation committee, of which Robert Allerton is chairman, several changes have been made in the arrangement of the permanent collections in the Art institute. Many new acquisitions and gifts obtained during the last year have also been placed on view under the direction of the committee. The collections of the Antiquarian society have been rearranged from the historical viewpoint.

The Korean painting, dating from the thirteenth century, a gift of the Arts club, is hung in gallery forty-eight, where the Chinese antiquities are now shown. Three Korean paintings of the thirteenth century have been added to the Nickerson collection.

In the corridors on the second floor may now be seen all the drawing owned by the institute. In corridor fifty-four there is an exhibition which pays tribute to the genius of Burne-Jones. There are over forty drawings in the exhibit, the majority of which were taken from what is considered his choicest notebook, and include many of his sketches for "The Mirror of Venus," three drawings presented by James Viles, and a tapestry, "Pomona," woven by the William Morris looms.

Three drawings by Abel Fann, a gift of Mrs. Julius Rosenwald, are shown in corridor thirty-three. In corridor thirty-seven are hung the Bakst drawings acquired in January.

The collection of medals, interesting and extremely complete, has been arranged in galleries thirty-four and thirty-six. The small bronzes which were formerly in gallery thirty-four have been placed in corridor twenty-nine.

The exhibition by Chicago artists, hung in the east wing, is drawing to a close. It has been one of the most gladly received exhibits that the institute has held in a good many months. Forty-two paintings have been sold from it. Only one of these has been bought by a club—the Arché club purchased that one. In a great many ways this is an encouraging sign, as it suggests that people are becoming more interested in getting good pictures into their homes.

That, of course, is where good pictures should be. But it does not seem as though the owners of those homes, in many cases, thought their walls the proper places for good taste in art to be displayed. So many people are satisfied with cheap prints or poor copies.

If for the same money they would buy such things as, for example, the etchings shown now in the printroom of the Art institute, they would get their money's worth in the present with the most excellent hope in the future of their etching or lithograph doubling in value.

Similarly with paintings. A good painting is a splendid asset. Scarcely ever does art diminish in value, if, to begin with, it is of value.

Among the most charming of the paintings in the Chicago artists' exhibition are a number on which this column has barely touched. Chief among these are the paintings by Pauline Palmer, whose "A Glimpse of the Sea" is one of the most refreshing canvases in the entire show. It is like a drink of cool water after a long thirst. The road with its scattered blades of succulent grass is like a road leading to Romany—a gypsy trail down to the sea and beyond.

Sweet and deliciously simple is "The Pet Canary." It pictures a smiling, cordial, not old lady, but a lady not young, holding in her lap a cage in which the yellow songster preens himself with pride.

The Chicago Ceramic Art association, which has for so many years delighted us with its exhibit in the Applied Arts exhibition held at the Art institute, has changed its name to the Technic Arts league.

The league is an association of active workers in the varied applied arts. It holds meetings at the institute on the first Friday of each month, when work is brought by the members for criticism of a constructive character. The object of the league is to improve the practice of design and decoration in practical objects, to improve artistically the productions of American industry, and to enrich life, in its broadest sense, by developing better expression in those matters which are of an esthetic nature.

A view of the Jacobean room at the Art institute; a gift to the institute, in memory of Mr. and Mrs. E. Buckingham, from their children.

WINNIE WINKLE, THE BREADWINNER. Winnie Uses Strategy

Perhaps.

By Guy Lee.

Two met who had been lovers in days of old lang syne,
And many years had flitted by since he thought her divine.
And bald was he whose wavy hair had been her special treat,
And she was fat who had been slim and trim and neat and sweet.

Two met who had been lovers some thirty years ago;
And she thought, "Can that shriveled joke have been my handsome beau?"
And he thought, "Is that corpulent and dowdy dame the peach Whose pulchritude and beauty used to rob me of my speech?"

Two met who had been lovers but drifted far apart;
The years had chilled the flaming charms that stir the youthful heart.
Two met—and all the both of them could do was haw and hem,
For as they looked and looked, O Gosh, the difference to them!

Yet if they hadn't busted up—had trod the days together,
With give and take, and mutual help, in fair and stormy weather,
Who knows but what the guy to her would be still brave and clever,
And she to him the maid he swore to have and hold for ever!

Own a SELECTED FARM in Western CANADA

Canadian National Railways

Come from the place where men call for land to the place where land calls for men. Along the lines of the Canadian National Railways, SELECTED land is selling from $20 to $50 an acre, unsurpassed for fertile soil and rich crops.

"SELECTED" Farms

Your "Selected" Farm will be carefully chosen from the cream of the richest wheat and cattle country in America. Experts representing 17,000 miles of railway will help you get just the farm that meets your needs. This service is absolutely FREE. You can investigate as many districts as you desire.

You'll Feel "at Home"

Western Canada extends a helpful hand to you. Friendly neighbors with the same language and customs—splendid schools, churches and social life—warm, sunny, growing summers and dry, healthful winters—law and order—efficient labor supply await you in this wonderfully prosperous last west.

Taxes Are Low

Western Canada taxes fall lightly on the farmer. There is a small tax on land, but buildings, improvements, animals, machinery and personal property ARE NOT TAXED AT ALL. There is no increased taxation on farm lands to meet war expenditures.

Big Profits in Wheat and Dairying

Western Canada is famous for its big wheat yields. "SELECTED" FARMS along the lines of Canadian National Railways average more than 20 bushels of wheat to the acre. Under specially favorable conditions, a yield of 50 to 60 bushels per acre is not uncommon.

Dairying is very profitable. That soil and climate are well adapted to it is shown in greatly increased production and high quality maintained. A world-wide market awaits all that Western Canada can produce.

Stock thrive on the prairie grasses which in many sections cure standing and make fine hay. Cattle and horses require only natural shelter most of the winter, and bring market prices without grain feeding.

Easy Terms Terms on "SELECTED" Farms: about 10 per cent cash down, balance in equal payments over a term of years; interest usually 6 per cent.

Reduced Rates and Special Excursions

Reduced railway rates will be made for landseekers and daily efforts to encourage inspection of the SELECTED Farms along the line of the Canadian National Railways. Personally conducted excursions for this purpose also will be arranged. Full information will be sent free on request.

The Jovial Goats

A census of any factory, store, office or home would probably disclose the fact that a vast majority of people experience the distresses due to acid stomach. One man says his breakfast coffee got his goat, another lays it to an orange, another says oatmeal is his digestive Nemesis. And so it goes. Many a stomach, at times, will reject a glass of milk. These are the folks whose hard-earned dollars make the diet specialist smile broad smiles—unless they learn the truth about acid stomach.

Suppose we separate the sheep from the goats—the wise men from the foolish virgins—place the blue-Sunday diet crowd on one side and the sausage and buckwheat cakes crowd on the other side. The jovial goats are the fellows who are taking life as it comes—preventing trouble by foresight rather than trying to remedy it after it arrives. And they are the ones who for twenty-five years have made the sale of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets nation wide—in every drug store throughout the United States and Canada. Join the smiling throng of Jovial Goats. Your druggist will initiate you today.

Give Your Stomach The Alkaline Effect

This Is What STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS Do To Relieve the Stomach of Acidity and Consequent Distress of Indigestion

Indigestion is a large subject. It may be referred to only in general terms. To describe it is to mobilize practically the entire population, tabulate all the different kinds of food, and then take into consideration all knowledge of human nature, all whims, moods, emotions, habits, psychology and all other terms—and the result may be determined as INDIGESTION or DYSPEPSIA due to acidity of the stomach, for some folks, and bounding health for the other fellow. And therefore, when the average citizen is concerned with relief, scholastic theory on the subject has no more interest to him than the "Neanderthal Man" theory has to the hackdriver. No, sir, he wants relief and if Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will give this relief that is all he is concerned about.

Now, let's see how this works out—

The Precautionary Signal—Two Ways of Relief

There are a few folks who seemingly can eat anything without later regrets. These super people are blessed indeed. But most of us are out of their class. We have our little pet idiosyncrasies about foods—veal distresses us. pastries, pies or cakes spoil an afternoon, or a night's sleep. Food that delights the eye seems to produce a reverse grouch in the stomach. And so it goes. What one may eat with delight and benefit is anathema to his brother. In the final analysis the thing to look for is "acid stomach"—an unnatural condition against which every sane stomach has a right to rebel. To forecast with 100% accuracy just when this condition is likely to occur is as futile as attempting to win the graces of the lady in the moon by a midnight flirtation. It can't be done and so people who have learned by experience count among life's indispensables Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These supply the stomach with an alkaline effect, thus promoting normal conditions as in health. This puts the O. K. on so-called rich food. When this natural condition exists all foods are reduced to a common level—all foods become agreeable foods and insure stomach comfort.

The precaution lies in the intelligent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Strict, tortuous, self-punishing dieting is a safeguard against acidity. But why inflict such punishment on man's short life when the other way is so easy—make the stomach alkaline with Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

The Alkaline Effect—You Feel Refreshed

There are occasionally cases where the stomach needs the ministrations of a skilled specialist. To such, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will be a wonderful demonstration of the value of an alkaline stomach while to the average person the revelation of their merits will be most welcome.

Think of being able to avoid all further acid troubles, to be able to prevent acid condition of the stomach or to relieve such a condition by the mere use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Their refreshing work is splendid repayment for their slight cost.

Eat Without Worry—Don't Fear Food

At any hotel, restaurant, cafe or club, and even at home one cannot always select or inspect the food to be eaten. Nor can we have an advance word about its preparation. Home-made fried cakes, mince pie, plum pudding, fried sausage, buckwheat cakes, a big Sunday dinner with all its trimmings—what a nightmare of horrors to some. And yet how easy it is to avoid distress!

The question to decide is whether prompt relief with Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the rational plan or whether it is better to suffer in silence or aloud until nature has overcome its acid-foe? The answer to you lies in the same answer of the millions of boxes of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets used every year by a host of friends in every walk of life. They have learned the joy of living in the joy of eating.

If you feel that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are an immediate necessity for you, then go to any drug store today and in exchange for 60 cents your druggist will supply you with a box.

AVIATION

C. Dickinson, 65, Makes His First Solo Air Flight

Father of Chicago Flying Flies 'Canuk' Around Course—Alone

BY MORROW KRUM.

CHARLES DICKINSON made his first solo flight last Sunday.

He sat in the rear cockpit of a Canadian Curtiss ship shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon talking—loudly above the purr of the idled motor—with E. L. Partridge, his instructor. They had made several trips around the course together.

"That last landing was good, just a trifle tail high, but plenty good enough," said Partridge.

The eyes of the student half-closed in a smile.

"Want to take it around alone?" asked Partridge.

"You bet," answered Charles Dickinson, and the instructor climbed out of the forward cockpit.

"Give 'er the gun—get your tail down when you land—go on—give 'er the gun," shouted the instructor as he jumped clear of the ship.

The eight cylinders burst into a roar. Fifty feet away the tail was up, then the wheels left the ground and "Old Man" Dickinson was flying. He flew the course and made a good landing.

Charles Dickinson is 65 years old.

His instructor contends that his student is the oldest man that ever piloted an airplane.

"Old Man" Dickinson—and he resents the nickname—has done more for flying in Chicago than any other one man. When the first airplane meet was held here ten years ago, Charles Dickinson was the man who started the ball rolling. When the Gordon Bennett cup races were held Charles Dickinson was the backer. The picture accompanying this story shows him sitting in an airplane in 1912. He was 56 then and airplanes were young.

He has been on Ashburn field every time an important flying event was to take place since he opened the field. No matter the hour or the weather, "Old Man" Dickinson is always there when a record is to be set up or a history making flight is to be commenced.

One morning he had the clerk at the Blackstone call him at 3 a. m. The huge Lawson Airliner was to leave Ashburn field that morning with ten passengers for New York. A taxi took him to the field long before the sun was up, and when the mechanics swung the sticks of the big ship Mr. Dickinson was hoping to be asked into the fuselage, but, too proud to make his desires known. The big ship roared away without him and he waved farewell until the ship passed over Gary.

He was there the morning the army captain set out for New York in a De Havilland and made the trip in a few minutes over eight hours.

Ashburn field and the Aero Club of Illinois are "his." We wants the club boosted and he wants the field boosted. He goes out to the field almost every day. He flies almost every day.

"We have a great field here," he said last week. "The big hangar houses eleven ships—and it's full up. John Metzger takes care of them—you know John Metzger; everybody who has flown around Chicago knows him. My instructor, E. L. Partridge, not only conducts a flying school there, but is building airplanes in Homewood. He has a factory there and is building four passenger jobs. He is a veteran of the army air service and one peach of an instructor.

"I soloed today—I soloed today."

And the fledgling, who has turned 65, waved his arms and danced around the hangar on one foot.

That first solo flight is the most historic event in the life of any pilot.

At Fort Bliss

Believing that through athletics and healthy amusement the service can have better men, and therefore better soldiers, officers at Fort Bliss laid out an extensive athletic and recreational program. Provision is made for basketball and baseball. A cinder track has been laid out and a boxing ring is to be built in the near future. A service club and library provide everything for indoor amusement and recreation.

To Have Fuel

It is contemplated establishing a landing field at Cincinnati as an intermediate station in connection with the aerial mail service between Pittsburg and St. Louis. It is believed that this field, fully developed, would be one of the largest and best landing fields in the country, owing to its natural drainage, which would permit its use the year around.

MAKES SOLO FLIGHT

Above you see Charles Dickinson as he sat in one of America's pioneer airplanes July 12, 1912. He flew a Canadian Curtiss ship around the Ashburn field course alone last Sunday.

English Writer Says Japan Has Growing Air Forces

BY C. C. GREY.

[Editor The Aeroplane, London.]

SO far back as March, 1920, it was reported that the Japanese military mission in Europe had bought 300 airplanes, chiefly Spads and Farmans, in France. Presumably these were bought from the French disposals board, as there has been no news of the Spad or Farman factories being active on Japanese orders.

Much about the same time Gen. Nagaoka, the chief of the mission, said: "The next war will be an air war, and the nation with the best air service will dominate its rivals both on land and sea." And subsequent events show that Japan is acting up to this obvious doctrine, which seems to be so strangely ignored by our politicians.

It is curious that Japan's first big purchase of airplanes should have been made in France, seeing that England is supposed to be Japan's only European ally. This may be explained by the fact that the Japanese army is in these days largely under French influence, while the Japanese navy is modeled on English lines.

This view seems to be borne out by the further fact that, so far as one can discover, no aircraft have been bought in England for the Japanese army, though a large number—as orders go in these days—have been bought here by the Japanese navy, and it is said that negotiations are afoot for many more. Also, it is understood that French pilots and mechanics have been engaged as instructors for the Japanese army. And it is known that an official mission was to have been sent by the Coastal Aera R. A. F. to the Japanese navy, but that this mission was canceled at the last moment, it is said as the result of representations made by the United States.

Evidently, however, the Japanese believe in our system of naval aviation, for they have engaged privately as instructors, both technical and on the flying side, certain able officers formerly of the R. N. A. S., and presumably intend to acquire in this way all the knowledge which they would have acquired from an official mission. Which they probably will do just as well and possibly at less expense.

In this they will have something of an advantage over an official mission, for the officers and men of such a mission would only be permitted to fly machines which had been duly passed by the technical department of the air ministry as being up to our own particular standard of safety. This standard is regarded by some of our best designers as being calculated by such highly academic methods as to detract seriously from the performance of our machines without in fact adding in the slightest degree to their safety.

That being so, free British pilots engaged by the Japanese navy will be at liberty to fly the best possible machines built to the designs of our best possible designers, free from official hindrances.

World's Largest Airship to Cross Atlantic in May

Will Attempt Flight from England to California

The Z-R-2, formerly the R-38, which the United States navy is having built in England and which is the largest airship ever constructed, will be flown to the United States late in May or early in June, 1921, according to plans being made by Naval Aviation in Washington, it was announced last week by the Manufacturers' Aircraft association.

The forthcoming flight will be the most important thus far in aeronautics. There is hope—and a slight possibility—that the great dirigible, instead of stopping in New Jersey, will continue on to the Pacific coast, without pause, thus making on the maiden voyage a nonstop record of approximately 8,000 miles.

Almost one-third larger, far more powerful, and with twice the cruising range of the R-34, which in 1919 made the round trip of the Atlantic ocean, after laying over several days on Long Island, the Z-R-2 undoubtedly is capable of the unbroken flight from England to southern California.

Naval Aviation has been endeavoring to establish an airship terminal on the Pacific coast, but has not succeeded. If facilities for housing the Z-R-2 can be provided, through the cooperation of the people of southern California, plans for the extended flight may be made accordingly. Naval Aviation hesitates to send the ship on through to a station which has no shelter, but it would be possible to have the Z-R-2 fly over New York to Chicago, St. Louis, or other of the great Mississippi valley cities, to be moored to a mast or otherwise anchored in the open.

At all events, it is now definitely known that the Z-R-2 will make the trans-Atlantic flight next spring about the time indicated. The arrangements which Naval Aviation are making are being followed eagerly by civilians interested in projected commercial airship lines. Plans for several such undertakings are under way, all of them more or less directly delayed by the lack of an aerial code in this country and also the lack of comprehensive operation and meteorological data.

The Z-R-2 is rapidly nearing completion at the Royal airship works, Cardington, Bedford, England. Its engines are being built at the Sunbeam Motor works, Wolverhampton, England. The latest information which Naval Aviation has received indicates that the Z-R-2 will be able to take the air in February, 1921, or very shortly thereafter.

Commander Maxfield has just sent to Naval Aviation a remarkable account of the operations of the R-32, which undoubtedly forecast the routine which will be followed during the forthcoming flight of the Z-R-2.

It is stated that the new American airship is approximately 700 feet long and more than 85 feet in diameter. It has a gas capacity of 2,720,000 cubic feet, as against 2,000,000 cubic feet in the R-34. The disposable lift of the Z-R-2 is about forty-five tons, while that of the R-34 is only about twenty-five tons. This means that the Z-R-2 is approximately one-third larger and has twice the cruising range. It has a maximum speed of sixty-nine or seventy miles an hour, but probably will throttle its six engines down to about sixty miles an hour.

In order to fit themselves for this epochal flight, Commander Maxfield's detachment underwent training consisting of lectures, both theoretical and practical, on all subjects pertaining to the care, maintenance, and operation of rigid airships, and then undertook practical work along the same lines. As instruction progressed and theoretical work was finished, lectures by American officers in navigation, tactics, strategy, and other naval subjects were added.

PLANES TO BE USED IN NEWSPAPER DELIVERY

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Feb. 19.—Delivery and distribution of daily newspapers throughout the middle west by airplanes will be a reality soon, according to Morgan J. Gillespie, representative of the Olympian Air-Ways, in Eau Claire, making arrangements to include Eau Claire in the proposed aerial passenger and express service between the twin cities and Chicago.

"Leading newspapers are already contemplating the feasibility and advantages in distributing their regular editions to outlying towns and cities by fast airplanes," said Mr. Gillespie. "Indications are the innovation will be introduced within the next few months, providing existing plans materialize.

"Persons living in towns and cities within a radius of 100 or 150 miles will receive their newspapers hours ahead of former schedules when this plan is adopted. Fast airplanes will await the freshly printed newspapers. As soon as they come from the press they will be rushed to towns, cities, and country communities miles distant."

Ships Delivered.

The first airplanes to be delivered under the production orders for pursuit types have been received at McCook field and assembled for test. The Thomas-Morse MB-3, powered with a 300 horse power engine, of which fifty have been ordered, is being flown to insure that the construction and operation are entirely satisfactory before proceeding with the delivery of the remaining forty-nine airplanes. The first production model of the Orenco "D," of which fifty are being built by the Curtiss company, has also been received and is being assembled to undergo acceptance tests.

In the Air.

A DH-4B, equipped by the chemical warfare service with gas tanks, was flown on a test flight a few days ago, the object of this test being to determine the feasibility of using gas against an enemy in the air and against troops on the ground. This plane was equipped with two gases which released formed a black smoke in the flight path. It is the intention of this command to adopt this method for camera obscura work, the assumption being that a plane cannot readily be seen against a blue sky, whereas the smoke can be seen at all times.

Slams of Life

WAIT TILL THEY HEAR JUDGE LANDIS.

(A congressional committee may call Judge Landis for a hearing on the Welty resolution.—News item.)

They thought that General Dawes was hard,
They gazed on him with a strange regard
When he was unlimbering parts of speech
That seldom congressional chambers reach;
They muttered "oh" and "well, well, well"
When he yelled "damn" and hollered "hell,"
But wait 'til they hear what Landis says—
Sw-e-et mamma! Oh, boy!
Wait 'til they hear Judge Landis hum.
They'll think that General Dawes was dumb.

General Dawes was stirred, they say,
And spoke in a most unconventional way;
Hot, sulphuric, and scoriac words
That seared the grass, and shocked the birds;
The plaster fell in the classic halls,
The paint was blistered upon the walls;

But wait 'til they hear Judge Landis talk—
Swe-e-et Jacob! Come . . . save!
When once they get in the Judge's clutes
They'll long for the General's tender touch.

They thought that General Dawes was tough.
(Dear me!)
Considered his sentences short and gruff.
(Ho! Ho!)
But now they'll hear epithets fall like hail
(Every one with a sting in its tail),
Acidulous, pungent, mordant fare,
That'll loosen their teeth and curl their hair—
For they're going to pick on Judge Landis now.
Hot coffee! Hold 'em, Yale!
After they've heard Judge Landis there,
Dawes will sound like a maiden's prayer.

Stearns

We sold more Stearns-Knight cars in the last 90 days than ever before

A most liberal education in automotive engineering will be obtained through inspection of a specially constructed chassis showing every detail of motor and mechanical construction, on exhibition at our salesroom at 2431 Michigan Avenue.

It is a striking reflex of popular supremacy of the Stearns-Knight car that in the last 90 days, during a period of acknowledged depression in the automobile industry, we have sold more cars than in any previous year during this same period. This success is due to the friends the Knight motored Stearns is making every day.

Such public favor is attributed to the realization that individuals appreciate a quiet running motor, plus a chassis which gives assurance that it will deliver all that you can expect from your automobile. Here are salient reasons of Stearns success:

First—There are no valves to grind. The Stearns is Knight motored.
Second—No carbon to contend with in a Knight motor.
Third—Even, uniform power under any and all conditions.
Fourth—A chassis that delivers the highest emergency service.
Fifth—Appearance that satisfies the most exacting requirements.

Every Stearns-Knight car sold has won its favor by performances which convinced the buyer that in riding qualities, in facility of control, in sustained delivery of smooth and apparently unbounded power, the Stearns-Knight delivers the maximum of satisfaction. You are invited to make the same tests.

Our Engineers Watch Over Your International Trucks

WHEN we deliver an International Motor Truck or a fleet of Internationals to a customer his business relations with this Company have only begun. He has made an investment—we make it a part of our business to help him realize a profit.

Aside from the steady performance of the truck—aside from the unusual and unequalled repair service, note this third factor: we back every International by free inspection at regular intervals during the life of the truck. We maintain road engineers whose sole duty it is to inspect your trucks—often, and without cost to you—to instruct the drivers, to return written reports to you, to point out the "stitch in time that saves nine." Thus we provide a known path for the truck owner to follow, and place his transportation work on a protective basis, eliminating expensive risks. We "deliver" longer life and greater efficiency for the truck because we know the value of customer satisfaction. We claim ours is after-sale service without parallel.

We offer for your consideration the great International line of Motor Trucks. This includes a size and style for every hauling purpose, from the 1500-pound truck, with a speed of 35 miles, to the 3½-ton truck for heavy-duty service. The complete line is on display at our sales room, 1814 South Michigan Avenue.

Note Its Present Price Compare It With Others

MEN naturally look to higher priced cars for a basis of comparison with Essex. The Essex price gives you nothing by which to judge its quality and ability.

In four times breaking the Trans-continental record with four different cars, Essex gave a proof of consistent endurance and reliability such as no other car has shown. High-priced cars, time and time again have tried to break the Trans-continental record. None ever succeeded. Essex did it four times, every entry beating the former record.

Can any car, at anywhere near its price, offer so many reasons for its choice? Compare it point by point and let price decide.

Lincoln Highway Will Offer Many Miles of Smiles

The Trail Is Marked from Sea-to-Sea Now

BY MORROW KRUM.

IN view of the fact that the Lincoln highway is becoming more popular each year with the motorists, it will be pleasant news for automobile owners to learn that the long road will provide better touring facilities this year than ever before.

In a report recently made by the highway association it is stated that in 1920 a total of 548 miles of country roads were improved. That represents 16 per cent of the highway.

The report states that had it not been for the lack of transportation facilities, building materials, the high prices, and shortage of labor, the condition of securities market affecting the sale of bonds for road building, and the reluctance on the part of contractors to undertake road work, the year 1920 would have seen a greater outlay than in any previous period.

However, according to the report, more than $7,469,492 was expended for the building of roads and $355,123 went for maintenance. The total represents an expenditure that comes within $1,000,000 of the high record year—1919—for the building of the Lincoln highway.

The association in 1920 completed the permanent marking of the road from the east coast as far west as Omaha, Neb., at a cost of $30,000. The western section to the Pacific coast had previously been marked. The Lincoln highway is now the longest permanently marked road, not only in the United States but in the world.

The thoroughfare was used by a larger number of motorists last year than ever before. Hundreds of tourists traversed the entire distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. Cheyenne, Wyo., was the stopping point for tourists from thirty-four states one day last summer, when a count of 2,540 people at the municipal camp ground was made. On one of the free camp grounds in Nebraska 764 motor tourists were gathered one day in July.

New Jersey completed fourteen miles of eighteen foot concrete construction, 10 and one-half inches thick at the center, and eight inches thick at the sides, with three foot bituminous macadam shoulders, continuous with the concrete at the sides, and with three foot dirt beams outside of the macadam shoulders, making a total width of grade of thirty feet. This section is one of the highest types of modern highway in the United States.

Pennsylvania is following the same plan as New Jersey in replacing the worn macadam sections of the highway with concrete. Eleven miles of reinforced concrete were undertaken in Lancaster county in 1920, and nineteen miles of the same type leading west from Gettysburg to Chambersburg. Included in the Pennsylvania budget was the sum of $112,000 for one of the finest bridges upon the highway.

Ohio was able to complete but 19.5 miles of standard construction, of a total of seventy-five miles contemplated at the beginning of the year. It is interesting to note that every foot of the Lincoln Highway across Ohio is either of brick, concrete, macadam, asphalt, or asphaltic concrete, or under contract for construction with one of these types.

Indiana planned to build forty miles of concrete on the highway in 1920, but only ten miles were finished. Illinois completed fifty-one miles of new twenty foot concrete between Geneva and the Mississippi river, the cost of which was $2,180,000. Contrasted with the mud which frightened the tourists but two or three years ago, Illinois now has one of the longest continuous stretches of permanent improvement on the route between the two coasts.

The grading of the highway across Iowa was practically completed, and nearly all of the bridges have been constructed of concrete.

Nebraska instituted a complete maintenance system on the highway from the Missouri river to the Wyoming state line. Seventy miles of new construction were added during the year. In Wyoming 237 miles were improved. Wyoming spent not less than 25 per cent of its total available highway funds for improvement upon this road.

In Utah the chief improvement was the wonderful new Skyline boulevard leading into Salt Lake City from the east. Nevada has gone the full length in the matter of Lincoln highway betterment, showing a total of $788,237 for new construction. With the work completed and that in progress, more notable improvement in Nevada will be in evidence than in any other state at the end of 1921. California spent $115,157.95 upon the highway in 1920 in completing several short sections and general maintenance.

James Newton Gunn, president of the United States Tire company, has just been elected president of the Lincoln Highway association. He succeeds F. A. Seiberling, who felt unable to attend longer to the responsibilities of the position.

Airplanes Will Race on Tuesday at Los Angeles

MAKING the proposed races at the Los Angeles speedway on Washington's birthday one of the most sensational sporting events of the season, the Aero club of Southern California will combine with the speed kings of America in presenting the program for the day.

In addition to automobile races by famous drivers, there will be airplane races which may surpass any flying events of the year, according to announcement made. Between thirty and forty airplanes will take part in the flying, and speeds to be shown in the air will vary from eighty to 145 miles an hour.

The most thrilling air event will be a race to San Diego and back, covering a distance of 250 miles. Planes with a speed of more than 125 miles an hour are the only ones to be allowed in this race, and there will be fewer than half a dozen contestants.

There will also be three short races over the course which will cover territory from the Los Angeles Country club to the Baldwin hills, and will all be in sight of the grandstands. Another race in view of all spectators will be given during the intermission of the automobile races. One woman, Neta Snooks, is entered and will fly against the field of forty men.

A number of amateur airplane owners—southern California multimillionaires who have taken up flying as an amusement—will enter planes. Among these men are Albert Hays of Pasadena, L. C. Brand of Glendale, George F. Stephenson, and R. I. Short of Los Angeles.

It is claimed that Los Angeles is the only city in the United States—not barring New York—that can stage such a large flying spectacle without the aid of the army and navy. This is not only because the climate of southern California has enabled a rapid development of aircraft, but because it has lured so many amateur sportsmen to take up flying.

National Leaders to Discuss Autos and Road Making

Conference at U. of M. May Result in New Courses

THE future of highway transport and its effect upon the economic and sociological life of the nation, as translated into terms of every day use of the highway by the farmer and the city user of the motor vehicle, will be discussed by men, nationally known in governmental, industrial, and educational circles at a notable conference to be held at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor Wednesday.

The conference is the second regional event held under the auspices of the highway and highway transport education committee with the officials of the university and the Michigan state highway department as collaborators. The first was held at Pittsburgh and others are planned in other sections of the country.

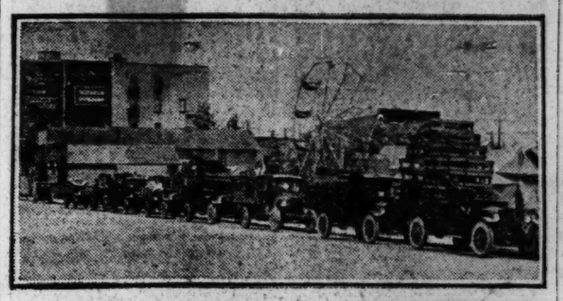
Back of them is the expressed intent of the committee to call attention of the public to the questions arising out of the new member of the trinity of transportation and to stimulate research and study along these lines in every grade of every class of educational institutions from the kindergarten on through the college as well as in community and vocational effort.

With virtually 9,000,000 motor vehicles now plying the 2,500,000 miles of highways of the country, a trained personnel will be needed to administer the vast sums of money which will be set aside for highway construction and maintenance while literally thousands of others will be required to build and operate the fleets of motor vehicles which authorities forecast, will shortly be supplementing railway and water way facilities.

In the opinion of members of the education committee broadened courses will be necessary in highway engineering while curricula looking forward to degrees in highway transport engineering will offer a broad field of opportunity to the college student. Concurrently the student in the grades will need to know something about safety and about the purposes and uses of the highways running past his door.

The program which has been prepared for the Michigan conference will include a discussion of these and many other phases of highway transport by men who have won national reputation in their fields. Both of the day sessions will be presided over by United States commissioner of education, P. P. Claxton, who will also deliver an address in the morning. T. H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads; Roy D. Chapin, vice president of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce; Col. Mason M. Patrick of the war department; George C. Diehl, chairman of the good roads board of the American Automobile association; Miss Harriet Beard, the safety specialist of the Detroit public schools; Prof. Henry E. Riggs, civil engineering, and Prof. A. H. Blanchard, highway and highway transport engineering, Michigan, and Charles J. Bennett, state highway commissioner of Connecticut, are among the other speakers of the day.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN



Carnival companies and circuses are beginning to employ truck trains in America—all because of the increase in good roads. Soon the big lion and tiger cages will be rolling from city to city over the highways, as in the days of old. Above you see a carnival company disembarking from the truck train.

Chicago Motor Club Gives Large Party in Coliseum

MORE than 2,000 persons attended a banquet given last Thursday night in the Coliseum by the Chicago Motor club, and it was estimated that 5,000 more filed into the building to watch the wrestling matches, the vaudeville acts, and to dance. According to Charles M. Hayes, president of the club, it was the most successful dinner and entertainment in the history of the organization.

"I can remember the time when we thought we were unusually fortunate to have 300 people attend our affairs," said Mr. Hayes. "But this year we were forced to rent the Coliseum to accommodate the people. We have more than 27,000 members now, and we expect to reach the 50,000 mark before the summer is over."

The banquet was attended by Mayor Thompson, who congratulated the club on its growth and urged them to continue the campaign for members, good roads, and better conditions for motorists.

Rattle in Shackles.

Spring shackle play or looseness between the spring end and the shackle may give much annoyance until the seat of trouble is discovered. Rattling caused by this looseness will be more frequent and distinct when the car is riding over fairly rough roads. A good method of taking up the play is to place shims between the spring end and the shackle. Or the play may be removed by tightening the spring bolt. Watch the shackles and do not allow mud to accumulate, for small particles of flinty grit in the mud make their way into the working parts and cause excessive wear. Lubricate the shackle bolts generously.

ASTRONOMY

WHAT COMETS ARE.

WANDERING wisps out of the emptiness into here. They come from the darkness, wheel once around the sun, and plunge back into the night. We call them comets. There are thousands of them in the sky, coming and going, like insects about a light.

Far beyond Neptune and the planets is a ring of nebula still uncondensed. It encompasses the solar system like a shell. Its inner portions have been rolled up into worlds, but in its outer parts there is still matter in its primeval state. The nebula pays allegiance to the sun. It is thinner than our vacuums, and extends on and on for no one knows how far, until it fades out into the stark emptiness of interstellar space.

This cloud outside the realm of worlds is the natal land of comets. Oftimes small bits of it, each fettered in inexorable bonds by the great gravity of the sun, come creeping to pay their homage. They sweep by the sun in parabolic paths, and then, their duty done, they draw themselves together and creep back into the realms of endless cold and night. The zone of comets averages 15,000,000,000 miles distant from the sun. Big comets there have lesser wanderers for their satellites, like planets have, and some are even systems, wheeling numbly in the sky.

There is hardly a night in the whole year when some comet, large or small, cannot be seen plying on among the stars that dot the sky. When any one of them comes near the earth we see it flaming in the heavens like an enormous gleaming foglike shape.

In 1832, as some still living can remember, a great comet suddenly flashed into view. It was one of a family who has its abode off in the sky in the direction of Sirius. Astronomers, watching through their telescopes, saw it heading for the sun. Down, down, it plunged, past Saturn, on by Jupiter, still holding straight down, through the zone of asteroids, by Mars, and past the earth.

As it came near us we saw it both by night and day. Its flaming bulk shone out in the clear blue sky like some white high-flown cloud. On, on, down, down, it ran, by Venus and by Mercury. Surely it would strike the sun! But no! For as it neared that globe its path began to deviate. Great yellow jets shot out, a long white tail poured forth behind.

It reached the sun. Its gases now were flaming yellow from the heat. Beneath, the scarlet gas waves on the sun heaved up and tossed like billows on the sea, while from far down below there rose a merciless blast of light and heat, enough, they say, to melt the earth and flash it into vapor.

And still the shape bore on. It cut the corona as it passed and almost grazed the sun itself, and then, while the observers watched, it swung itself around and started back. It took but five short hours for that shape to make its perihelion passage; five hours for what to us takes a year!

Its mighty tail, extending out to Mars, bent backward like an awful scimitar, and as the comet swung the tail swung, too, and lived. If its tail had been of the toughest steel instead of tenuous gas the force of turning would have rent it all to fragments and strewn it far and wide across the universe. But comets are not solid, and so can do such things. Once by the sun it sailed serenely back to space, and left the world forever.

Three other comets belong to that same group. They follow in each other's orbits as if their pathless tracks across the sky were laid on rails, and they themselves were shapes on wheels. They tell us that all four of them are safe back home at last, some score of billion miles away, all lying in a space no larger than a million miles across.

What is a comet? It is rock and dust and gas. Left to itself, it is nebula, but when subjected to the blaze of light the sun sends forth, it takes the shape it does. The comet's head, or starlike part in front, is some small swarm of meteoric stones, flying in an orbit to the sun. The haze about the head is the comet's atmosphere. The comet's tail points outward from the sun. The cause is sunlight.

Driftwood piled upon the shore, and molecules of gas, driven onward by the light, both indicate how waves can push. All light is made of tiny waves.

Most objects that we know are so gross and clumsy that these delicate waves cannot affect them, but out in the free vacuum of space the case is different. Gravity, which pulls all bodies in, acts on mass alone, no matter what the size may be. Light presses only upon surface. Now, as an object shrinks in size, the relation of volume to its area grows less and less, until at last, when it is exceedingly small, there comes a time when the force of light, feeble though it be, can quite outweigh the pull of gravitation, and instead of flying inward it flies out. This makes the comet's tail.

Some tails are long and straight, some curved, and some are short and stumpy. The first are made of fine grained hydrogen, the second are the coarser molecules of hydrocarbon gas, and the little ones are heavy metal clouds.

Comets, speaking in a larger sense, have no mass worth mentioning. Their substance is all on display, they are transparent, and they have no weight. Even our own tiny earth was once observed to drag a giant comet far out of its appointed path. When the earth strikes one, as it does sometimes, it plows a hole through like a bullet through a bank of fog.

FARM AND GARDEN

Not a Wizard, but a Woman Gives Tips on Turkey Raising

By Frank Ridgway.

BRONZE STRUTTERS ANSWERING MESS CALL—Mrs. Rea E. Fowler is here shown in her poultry yard feeding her flock of Bronze turkeys on the Fowler farm near Rochelle, Ill. Her crop of Thanksgiving birds yields more money each year than does the grain grown on the farm. She has succeeded financially, gained distinction in the poultry world as a breeder and exhibitor, and is secretary-treasurer of the International Turkey club.

"IT takes a wizard to raise beautiful birds like that one," remarked a National Poultry Show visitor, pointing to the big turkey that had just been declared champion of this year's exhibition. "He looks like a bronze statue standing there on the top of that barrel. I wonder how such wonderful specimens are produced," he added, reaching for one of the bronze feathers that were being plucked from the bird's tail and handed out as souvenirs by Mrs. Rea E. Fowler, Rochelle, Ill., owner of the champion.

Wizards are not uncommon among the men of the farm who gain recognition as breeders of live stock, but the women are seldom listed in this class. Certainly Mrs. Fowler is an exception, for a woman who has succeeded in breeding turkeys as she has done, winning championships in competition with the best from the flocks all over the United States, has surely earned such distinction in the poultry world. She is the secretary-treasurer of the International Turkey club.

Poults Require Constant Care.

"Any woman can do what I have done in the turkey raising business if she is willing to give part of her time to the work of caring for the poults during the first six or eight weeks," she said. "There is little expense in the raising of turkeys. The most important prerequisite to success with turkeys is the constant care of the poults until they are a month and a half or two months old.

"Many persons get the idea that I concentrate my efforts on the growing of turkeys for the showroom, but this is a mistake. My real object is to grow them for the market, the same as cattle and hogs are grown for the market, and the exhibiting of birds at poultry shows is merely incidental. I handle them because there is money to be made in the work. I realize a good income from my flock of turkeys each year. You may be surprised to know that I make more money with my turkeys than we get from the grain grown on our farm."

Turkey Shortage Every Year.

Poultry judges say that Mrs. Fowler has some of the best, if not the best, turkeys in the middle west, and it is in this section that most of the Thanksgiving birds are produced in this country. There is a great shortage of turkeys, which is manifested each year during holiday seasons, and a great premium is placed on the birds for the Thanksgiving and Christmas markets. Consequently prices are extremely high, making the turkey raising business attractive for those who are willing to give attention to the work.

"Most of my life has been spent in the city, but ever since I came to the farm I have appreciated the opportunity there is in the growing of turkeys for the market," added Mrs. Fowler. "I enjoy the work. My early experience was somewhat expensive and discouraging at times. I have had birds die that cost me as much as $50 and $100 each. I also lost many of my poults, but I never gave up. I just kept trying."

Get Good Foundation Stock.

In giving advice to beginners Mrs. Fowler emphasizes the importance of securing good foundation stock, particularly the male. "Get the best standard bred male you can afford," she advises. "The standard weight males are most desirable. (The standard weight of the bronze turkey is about thirty-six pounds for adult birds 2 years old or over.)

"Beginners often get the wrong impression of the proper size of male turkeys by reading of males weighing as much as fifty-seven pounds. Such large specimens are useless as breeders and should be classed as freaks or monstrosities. Extra large birds should never be used in the breeding pens. This is also true of the turkey hens, for many times they are poor layers and their eggs hatch unsatisfactorily.

"The day of using the scrub turkey for breeding purposes has passed. The breeder who gets ahead is the one who is never satisfied with his birds, but studies them constantly with the determination of raising better ones each year. He selects with the aim of improving the color, markings, and similar characteristics."

Buy from Reliable Breeder.

There are six varieties of domestic turkeys recognized by the American standard of perfection. The one most widely known is the bronze, the kind grown on the Fowler farm. The others are the black, bourbon, red, slate, Narragansett, and White Holland. It is, of course, always advisable to buy from a reliable breeder, and the birds should be transferred to their new home at least by March 1.

"Never fatten birds that are kept for breeding purposes," continued Mrs. Fowler. "Birds that are too fat are poor breeders. It is better to keep them thin in flesh rather than fat. We learn a great deal about feeding by studying the habits of the wild turkey. They wander over a wide range gathering their feed; they have to hustle for their feed or starve, and this keeps them in ideal condition in winter.

"Feed your birds sparingly, and give them but little corn when they are not being fed for the market. We feed oats mixed with plenty of charcoal in a trough about a foot from the ground. Charcoal is of great value as a conditioner.

Keep Fowl in Yard or Orchard.

"During the laying season, which starts about the last of March or the first of April, depending on the earliness of warm weather in the spring, it is a safe rule to use one tom with ten hens. It is quite natural for the hen to wander a long way from home to make her nest, and she lays her eggs in the brush or grass, covering them with leaves. The eggs are difficult to find.

"We keep our turkeys in a yard during the laying season. An orchard makes a nice place if it is well fenced with turkey-proof wire. Clipping their wing feathers will prevent them from flying over the fence. We use boxes and barrels for them to lay in, putting in leaves and straw for nesting material.

"The eggs should be gathered every day. A china egg should be kept in the barrel or box for a nest egg. Keep the eggs in a cool place and turn them daily. Each hen will normally lay from fifteen to twenty eggs the first laying, and if shut up for a few days she can be made to lay a second and even a third laying; but the latter is usually too late for the eggs to hatch and the birds to become full sized by fall.

Regarding Incubator Temperature.

"The eggs may be set under the turkey hen, a chicken hen, or an incubator. I use the incubator and hatch out from fifty to 125 eggs at a time. The turkey hen is the only successful means of brooding the little poults. Keep a few china eggs under her until the eggs hatch in the incubator or under a chicken hen. When the poults arrive slip one or two of them under the old turkey hen's wing at night, and by morning she will own all you give her. I generally give them twelve or fifteen poults. Dust the hen with insect powder when she first begins to set, and keep her free from lice and other insects throughout the entire season.

"In using the incubator run it the first week at 102½ degrees, 103 degrees the second week, and 104 degrees the last week. The incubation period for turkey eggs is twenty-eight days. The eggs must be sprinkled with water every day during the last week. Constant care is needed where the incubator is used, for if the temperature runs too high the germ in the egg is killed and the egg will not hatch.

First Feed Mixtures.

"My first feed given the little poults is in about twenty-four hours after they come out of the shells. I use rolled bread crumbs. I buy stale bread at a bakery, allow it to dry, roll it, and moisten the crumbs with milk. To this I add a few hard boiled eggs mashed fine, and sprinkle the mixture with fine chick grit and a little fine charcoal. This mixture I feed three times a day for a week. Then I add onion tops or lettuce cut into fine pieces.

"At the end of three weeks, if the weather is favorable, I allow them to range freely, feeding them a little twice a day. They are kept off the range until after the grass is dry. Each hen is shut up in a separate coop at night, and the little poults are allowed to run in and out as they please. Feeding encourages them to come home at night. After six weeks or two months they will hustle for their food. When grasshoppers are plentiful poults do not need to be fed in the morning.

"I usually raise from 150 to 200 each year. I am keeping thirty hens this season. The demand for both fancy and market birds increases each year.

"If the young turkeys can be kept free from lice and other insects and not allowed to get wet and chill, they cause little trouble."

ACCOUNTING

Cost — C.P.A. — Federal Tax — External Auditing (Public) — Internal Auditing (Executive)

For the first time in the history of accounting instruction highly specialized home-study courses giving intensive training in advanced branches of accounting are now available to qualified applicants. Each course represents the condensed experience of a number of specialists and is the equivalent of many years' experience.

Applicants who are not ready to profit through the study of the Post Graduate courses may enter for our general accounting course. Our entrance examination enables men of advanced standing to avoid unnecessary review or study. All lessons loose leaf. Every examination is passed on, graded and signed by a Certified Public Accountant.

O, LOOK! SO DIFFERENT!

If you can wait a few months to move into your new bungalow or two flat building I can save you from $1,000 to $1,500. This is closer to the loop than anything put on the market in the last seven years with excellent transportation, stores, theaters, schools, churches, etc., only one block away. It is what Chicago has been waiting for and to 150 people prepared to make a deposit of $100 I can offer them what they want on the easiest terms and in the best district possible. This will go in no time, so if you are interested address B A 569, Tribune.

TOUGH LUCK IS RIGHT!

Just as soon as it begins to look like easier food prices Mr. Landlord puts up your rent!

Are you trying to hold on in the city until the cost of living comes down? You've got a long wait ahead of you.

Why not make the start now and plan to have a home of your own? Don't try to fight high rent and taxes in the city. What's the use?

Move your Home in the Country—outside the city, on line of good transportation. A few minutes' ride from the city and your work. Get a good big patch of fertile land, you can grow a garden, raise chickens, and cut down your living costs. We help you build.

BIG FERTILE TRACTS AS LARGE AS 8 CITY LOTS, ONLY

$425

$65 CASH, BAL. $7 PER MO.

LOCATION: You can't find a prettier location than this; it's the most beautiful section of suburbia; handsome homes, hundreds of acres of fine rich farm land, deep black soil, high and dry, just a little over half hour's ride from the loop. Located on the great Burlington Ry., a station conveniently located right in the center of the property.

TRANSPORTATION: Trains, trains, fast trains all the time, early and late, enable you to live in this delightful place, then have a nice chicken farm or truck garden and ride in comfort on the Burlington Road to and from your work in the city; fare only 12 cents.

It will be hard for you to find an attractive location like this in the city or suburbs anywhere, and if you could, the price would be way over what we will charge for a Big Suburban Lot or a Small Farm.

Not an acre of this vast tract of splendid land will remain unsold by next summer. Buy now while you can take your pick of many fine locations. Buy now before the great $65,000,000 new Union Depot at Chicago is completed, for this great new station will serve the Burlington and this will mean improvements, transportation instantaneous heater; living room 13x25; screened front porch, glazed din. and slp. porches; 4 fine bedrooms; tile bath; transportation, 3½ blocks; school, 2½ blocks. Owner on premises.

SEND COUPON FOR BIG FREE BOOKLET.

You men who are planning on some day getting out in the country on a nice little place of your own—stop right now and fill out the attached coupon. Get our big free illustrated booklet telling about the farming conditions and opportunities that are open to the farmseeker in Antrim, Kalkaska, and Otsego Counties, Michigan.

WE SAY TO YOU,

and the statement is backed by 20 years' experience in the colonization business, that never before have we been able to offer the landseeker a greater opportunity in the way of land bargains than is open to you NOW. Hardwood land close to markets, schools, churches, on good roads and direct to towns and main line railroads—presents the ideal combination for a farm home—good productive land in a splendid location. Many spring fed lakes and streams add to the natural beauty of this district, and afford the fisherman an abundance of sport. Sounds good, doesn't it? But how have we made it possible for most any man to get started on some of this splendid land?

OUR SALES PLAN

has answered that question to the satisfaction of hundreds of customers and settlers. A small down payment, the balance on easy terms, and an absolutely sure title to the farm is yours. We give you, among many other special helps, free insurance protection and the services of practical farmers to help you in farming methods. Our policy is to help you all we can along the road to success. And that is the kind of a farm we have held the price down to the exceptionally low figure of $15 to $30 per acre—a fact which will benefit the man who gets in on the ground floor now, before the rise in prices which is sure to come. You cannot afford to delay with an opportunity such as this within your reach.

ACT NOW.

Fill out the coupon and send it in. It will bring you by return mail and without obligation, our big illustrated booklet and full information. It costs nothing to investigate—and it may mean the biggest thing you ever did in your life. DON'T PUT IT OFF.

Cadillac Phaeton

$3,250

For the sportsman who desires a distinctive appearing car of warm coloring, this beautiful sport model will appeal strongly. The entire car is red except the radiator and lamps, which are polished silver. The body, fenders, wheels, patent leather tire covers, bumper, top boot, special seat covers, floor rug, etc., all blend harmoniously in one combination or rich red. This car was used by us as a "show car" during Automobile show week and attracted more attention than anything we ever exhibited. We are now offering it for sale at a sacrifice. Needless to say this car is absolutely perfect mechanically, and that it cannot be distinguished from brand new. The tires are brand new non-skid cords. If you have not seen this sport car it would be worth your while to come in and look it over, especially if you would like to own something extraordinary in a motor of this type.

Cadillac 59 Coupe

$4,250

If you placed this beautiful car alongside of one on the Cadillac salesroom floor you could not tell them apart. It is impossible to distinguish this car from a brand new one. The equipment consists of 5 cord tires (none of which show the slightest signs of service), spring bumper, special double heater, long plate glass reflector on inside of car, etc. Upholstered in a soft brown velour. Finish of body, etc., standard Cadillac blue. Here is an opportunity to save considerable money on the latest model Cadillac Victoria coupe.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

PUTS GLEN ELLYN IN A TIN BOX AND LUGS IT TO N. Y.

Trip Results in Building Boom in Suburb.

BY AL CHASE.

It'll probably surprise residents of Glen Ellyn to know that several of the leading citizens of the Du Page county town and practically all of its most attractive residences were last week crammed into a tin box, taken to New York, and shown to Walter Stabler, controller of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company. And after Mr. Stabler had watched these leading citizens stroll about the business section of Glen Ellyn, and also had given the town's residences a careful once over, the lights were turned on—and Mr. Stabler turned to Hiram S. Cody, manager of the real estate loan department of the Chicago Trust company, and said: "Great stuff! It's a good idea. Glen Ellyn's a good town and we'll O. K. those loans. Let's have lunch."

HIRAM S. CODY. [Matzene Photo.]

Films the Town.

Hiram Cody originated the idea of taking Glen Ellyn to New York. As told in this department recently, some Glen Ellyn men planned to build twenty-five houses. In order to get the necessary O. K. in New York on the proposed $160,000 loans, Mr. Cody took a moving picture machine and operator and spent an afternoon in Glen Ellyn. Then he hopped a rattler for Gotham and breezed into the office of the Metropolitan Life with his tin film box. It took only a few minutes of visual argument to convince Mr. Stabler that Glen Ellyn was a good place to build in.

Mr. Cody will take moving pictures every few weeks of progress on the twenty-five Glen Ellyn houses now under way and others contemplated in that town and send the films on to the Metropolitan company for inspection.

Uses Movies to Sell Bonds.

Mr. Cody also is using films to sell real estate bonds. For instance, the Chicago Title company recently made a $300,000 loan on the Otto Heineman company's big mile at Armitage and Fairfield avenues, which are valued at $550,000.

Moving pictures are now being taken of the plant, both exterior and views showing the spinning of silk into fabric. When a prospective bond buyer comes into the Chicago Trust company he will be escorted into a nifty little projection room, and in five minutes shown the entire plant and get a better idea of what he is putting his money into than he could in half a day's inspection on foot.

Will Record All Loans.

"I'm planning to have moving pictures of all the housing loans of the Metropolitan Life made through this bank in North Elkton and vicinity," said Mr. Cody. "Within a month we'll have a complete record of all building loans to show in New York or to use in our own office in the projection room we're having built."

According to Mr. Cody, the Metropolitan Life Insurance company has loaned $25,000,000 since last June all over the country on housing propositions, and is ready to loan $50,000,000 this year. Since July 1, 1920, Chicago and suburbs have used $600,000 of Metropolitan funds through the Chicago Trust company in building 115 houses.

Rouses Other Towns.

The report in THE TRIBUNE of Feb. 6 of the progressiveness of Glen Ellyn in starting a building movement has stirred interest in several neighboring communities. A delegation of Elgin bankers visited Glen Ellyn a few days ago to find out how it was being done. West Chicago also sent over some business men to find out all about it. According to Frank J. Bogan, cashier of the Du Page County State bank of Glen Ellyn, inquiries have been pouring in from all over northern Illinois.

Kankakee Real Estate Dealers Organize Board

Kankakee is the newest addition to the rapidly growing list of Illinois cities which maintain real estate boards. Harry L. Topping was elected president of the new organization, Cassius Taft is vice president, and C. L. Tracy was named secretary-treasurer. J. W. Work of Evanston, regional director of the National Association of Real Estate boards and vice president of the state body, and Don Goss, publicity director for the national organization, spoke at the organization meeting.

J. H. Selz Pays $40,000 for Glencoe Residence

The sale of the J. R. Meyers residence at 740 Sheridan road, Glencoe, to J. Harry Selz, president of Selz, Schwab & Co., shoe manufacturers, has just disclosed as having been made for $40,000 cash. Mr. Selz is having extensive alterations made and will move in within a few weeks. The property is 300x118 and is at the southwest corner of Beach road.

Easterners Win Most Honors in Small House Competition

Eastern architects walked away with nearly all the honors in the $15,000 national small house competition, conducted in conjunction with the Own Your Own Home exposition to be held in the Coliseum, March 26 to April 2. Out of 1,100 designs of small houses submitted, Chicago architects turned in a goodly number, but failed to win even one of the twenty-nine prizes.

Architect Louis Justement of Washington, D. C., was awarded the first prize of $500 for a plan of a four room stucco house shown in the adjoining picture.

According to the architect's notes the exterior is to be finished smooth and colored white; exterior woodwork painted a light gray blue; iron work painted black; roof to be of red mission tile.

Cost Estimates Vary.

But as to cost there isn't so much certainty. According to Architect Henry K. Holsman of Chicago, president of the Illinois chapter of the American Institute of Architects, who was in charge of the national competition, the minimum price of building this prize winner in Chicago based on cubic contents, would be $8,484, and the maximum, $12,726.

Alexander H. Revell & Co. already are at work erecting an exact replica of this house in their Wabash avenue store. The William Zeloskey company is planning to duplicate the prize winning four room frame residence at the Coliseum. Two of the brick associations are contemplating erecting the elevation of the prize winning four room brick house also at the Coliseum.

Four Chicago Firms Mentioned.

In addition to the twenty-nine prize winners there were twenty-five additional plans selected as next in merit and of these twenty-one will be chosen to be placed in a book of plans to be published and sold at the home exposition for 50 cents. Four Chicago architectural firms are included in these twenty-one. They are: R. A. Beaudry, F. M. Hogdon, Elmer J. Fox, and C. Lampe & E. Martin.

All plans will be available to the prospective home builder at a minimum cost of $25, which will include all specifications and working drawings and any necessary architectural advice.

HERE'S SOMEBODY PUTTING JOY INTO SCHOOL KID'S LIFE

Somebody's always putting joy into life—for the American school kid. The Society for Visual Education, a national organization of progressive American educators, has been doing this by putting a little zip into dull studies via the moving picture. This branch has developed so fast that the society recently has decided to enlarge its activities and manufacture its own projection machines.

H. L. CLARKE. [Walinger Photo.]

With this in view the Acme Motion Picture Projector company's plant at 1134 West Austin avenue has been purchased for a reported $100,000. The factory is on a 150x75 lot and the purchase includes all equipment and stock in the company. An apartment house on the lot will be torn down and an addition to the four story factory will be built at once. At present fifty projection machines daily are made. The annex will double the output.

The society will continue to make the present Acme models in addition to a new projector developed by Prof. Forest Ray Moulton, of the University of Chicago, and secretary of the Society for Visual Education. Both moving pictures and stills can be shown on this machine.

According to H. L. Clarke, vice president of the society, and president of the Utilities Development corporation, the Society for Visual Education has recently secured from Dr. Frank M. Woodruff, curator of natural history museum, Chicago Academy of Sciences, 2,000 stereopticon slides showing animal, insect, and plant life of this section. It represents thirty years of work by Dr. Woodruff and is said to be the best of its kind in the world. These will supplement the society's 15,000 slides covering the whole world and several thousand moving picture reels on history, geography, geology, astronomy, biology, civics, and other subjects.

Realtor Notes

W. I. Hollingsworth, past vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and also former president of the Los Angeles Real Estate board, stopped off in Chicago on his way from Washington, D. C., to southern California and was the guest of Tom Ingersoll, secretary of the national association, at the Chicago Real Estate board's Valentine day luncheon.

According to Frederick M. Bowes, the Bowes Realty company has received so many inquiries for office space in the Pelouze building at 230 East Ohio street that it has opened an office on the premises.

V. C. Sweinhart and E. J. Sweeny, formerly of R. C. Russell & Co., have purchased the Edgewater Bank building at 5545 Broadway, at Bryn Mawr avenue, and will move their business across the street and operate under the name of the Sweinhart Realty company. They will maintain safety deposit vaults in addition to their general real estate and insurance business.

Among the Architects

Byron H. Jillson has been elected a member of the American Institute of Architects.

Clark C. Wright, a member of the architectural firm of George C. Nimmons & Co., has been appointed chairman of the architects' division of the ways and means committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce. The other members of the division are Architects Max Dunning, vice chairman; Alfred S. Alschuler, Mr. Jensen of Mundie & Jensen, S. Scott Joy, and C. Herrick Hammond.

Building Permits

Eight building permits were issued yesterday including:

Morgan-st., S., 8024, two story brick res.; J. F. Carlson, owner; S. Lindroth, arch; A. Johnson, mason; J. F. Carlson, carp.....$10,000

Sixty-third-st., W., 1856-1858; two story brick store and office; Dr. Greenberg, owner; J. Scott, arch.; S. Monson, mason; E. Petterson, carp.....$30,000

Addison-st., 3557-3501; one story brick dairy; Irving Park Dairy Co., owner; A. Teisen, arch.....$25,000

Why Not in Chicago?

Why don't they build something like this in Chicago? According to the American Contractor, you can buy three room bungalows in Maywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, on 50x100 lots, at a total cost of $1,925. This includes the lot. The first payment is only $288.75, and the balance is paid at the rate of $25 a month.

Delang Pays $20,000 Cash for Band Box Buildings

Theodore A. Delang, tailor, 332 South Michigan avenue, has paid a reported $20,000 cash to John R. Montgomery and Kemper K. Knapp for the double house at 70-72 East Oak street, now occupied by Marguerite, modiste, with the Band Box. Each house is 15x100. The new owner has renewed the lease with Marguerite for another year. At the expiration of it he probably will use the property for his own business. Marguerite at the same time renewed her lease for one year on the house adjoining at 68 from the estate of Alexander E. Hannah. Harold A. Bradley & Co. negotiated the transactions.

Wabash Avenue Leasehold Bought by Oak Parker

Henry Hogans of Oak Park purchased the leasehold estate at the northeast corner of Wabash avenue and Van Buren street yesterday from the Wexford company for a reported $150,000. S. P. Brannan of William D. Murdock & Co. handled the deal. The Marshall Field estate owns the fee. The four story building, 60x100, has three kinds of restaurants in it. In the basement is the Friars' inn, Thompson has an arm chair café on the first floor, and above it is a serve yourself eatery. Mr. Hogans conveyed considerable improved and vacant realty in payment.

JUNIOR LOOP LURES MOST 1920 REALTY BUYERS—OLCOTT

Olcott's Land Values Blue Book for 1921, published by George C. Olcott & Co., 118 North La Salle street, has just been placed on the market. Mr. Olcott's remarks about realty conditions as shown in his book are both interesting and worth reading by owners and prospective buyers. He says:

"The 1921 issue of Olcott's Land Values Blue Book contains a record number of changes. The whole north shore district shows a decided enhancement in values over the previous year. On account of the many large hotel and apartment house projects the Wilson avenue district attracted the largest number of buyers. Notable advances were recorded.

"On the south side the high class residential sections of Hyde Park and the south shore district in the vicinity of Jackson park maintained previous quotations, and owing to many new important improvements made decided advances in some favored localities.

"On the west side little change in prices were noted except in the outlying portions of that territory. The downtown district remained practically the same. Retail streets throughout the city and particularly in the local centers recorded the greatest enhancement of values. The North Michigan avenue territory attracted much attention, with many notable sales at new levels of prices.

"Industrial sites almost in every portion of the city, especially with switching facilities, showed phenomenal increases in values. Many new subdivisions were placed on the market notwithstanding adverse building conditions. However, the movement was not up to the previous year's record. The high rent problem was perhaps the most effective agency in promoting sales in this class of property. It evidenced a strong desire to 'own your own home' tendencies.

"Perhaps the most general cause of increases was due to the enhanced cost of street improvements, both surface and underground. This affected every locality. Whereas in pre-war times such improvements could be secured for about $5 per running foot, they now cost $17.50 per foot and up."

NEW INDUSTRIAL CENTER OPENED ON SOUTH SIDE

Another good sized industrial district has just been placed on the market as the result of the Albert Dickinson company deciding to dispose of that part of its seventy acre tract bounded by the drainage canal, California avenue, Thirty-fifth street, and the Pennsylvania, B. & O. C. T., and Chicago Junction tracks, which it does not use for its immense seed plant.

Only a few acres at the southwest corner of the tract are utilized by the Dickinson concern and only a few acres more are held for future growth. Already the Dickinson industrial development, the official name of the district, is negotiating with several large concerns for warehouse and factory sites. In addition to having Chicago Junction service, Pennsylvania, and B. & O. C. T., the Illinois Central and Santa Fé tracks cross the district. There is a water frontage of 2,000 feet on the drainage canal.

Former Theodore Thomas Residence Sold—$20,000

H. Paul Juergens, now living at the Surf hotel, has purchased the residence of the late Elmer Adams, attorney, at 52 Bellevue place, from his widow. Mrs. Adams is planning to move to an apartment. Mr. Juergens paid $20,000 for the property, which was once the home of Theodore Thomas, founder of the Chicago orchestra. Cremin & O'Connor were the brokers.

NEW BUILDING BODY PROMISES 30% COST CUT

Plans to Erect One Hundred Fifty Structures.

A reduction of 30 per cent in the cost of building is the rather startling promise made by a newly formed housing organization known as the American Home Builders. Work is to start the middle of next month on twenty buildings, two flats each, the first installment of a total of 150 for this year. After 1921 it is planned to erect about 450 a year.

The promised saving in cost is to be effected by the company operating as jobber and merchant in every branch of building materials; it will manufacture certain items, build houses and flats on its own lots, finance its own buildings, and act as its own brokers.

Trustees Practical Men.

The concern already has an option of an eleven acre material yard and also on a sand and gravel pit and a brick yard. All buying will be for cash and in large quantities. And all the trustees, it is claimed, are practical, experienced building men. S. V. Svenson is president and treasurer; Lyman J. Allison, vice president; Henry B. Chase, secretary; Edwin C. Goldbeck, Harry W. Peterson, Erick A. Larseon, and Andrew Ladegard, trustees.

It is claimed that $200,000 capital already has been subscribed, and that $70,000 of it was taken by the officers. Every laborer will be required to be a stockholder, though buyers of property need not be members.

To Start on Northwest Side.

Here's what the organization claims: "A two flat, five and six room brick building, costs today on the old fashioned system, $10,000 to $15,000 to build. Our system will bring the price down to $7,000 to $10,000 with no reduction in quantity or quality." Terms will be $1,000 down and the balance on monthly payments at 6 per cent plus a commission. The first two flat buildings will be erected on the northwest side. Vice President Allison is architect for the organization.

All Space Rented in Newly Opened Boul Mich Building

Slowly but surely the strip of Boul' Mich' between Randolph street and the river is being converted into a high class retail shopping district. The newest addition to the district is the millinery establishment of Louis H. and Lillian R. Miller, which is to open at 221 North Michigan avenue, in the Massasoit building. The lease is for five years at a term rental of $27,000.

John R. Magill & Co., managers of the building, representing the Northern Trust company, trustee, report that with the closing of this lease they have completed the renting of the building, which was recently completed. The entire boulevard level is occupied by high grade shops selling women's wear, and the upper floors of the seven story building are occupied by offices. The gross annual rental of the property, which is 131x69, is said to amount to $106,000.

New Bradford Hotel Is Rechristened the Savoy

Hotel Savoy is the latest name for the New Bradford hotel at Michigan and Thirtieth. Jacob Cassman of 2219 Douglas boulevard has purchased the interest of his partner, and as sole owner announces he started spending $25,000 in remodeling, refurnishing, and redecorating the eight story building. It has 260 rooms.

TEUTONS RATION ROOMS.

In Cassel, Germany, a city of 170,000 population and 5,400 without homes, the authorities are "rationing" rooming houses and hotels.

Build Now!

In 1920 we loaned over Two Million Dollars to build new homes and apartments in Chicago.

THAT HELPED SOME!

We have Five Million Dollars or more to loan to help build new homes or apartment buildings in Chicago in 1921.

CAN YOU USE SOME OF IT?

We have many old friends, we are making many new ones. It will cost you nothing to advise with us, and get the benefit of our 34 years' experience.

STUDIO DE LUXE

Loop Artist Buys Old Time North Side Mansion.

MISS MABEL SYKES. [Sykes Photo.]

One of the best known of the old time north side residences, built in 1895 when North La Salle street was an "avenue" almost as socially important as the Lake Shore drive, is the house now occupied by John F. Jelke, oleomargarine maker, at No. 1352. Mrs. Alfred J. Barsanti of 5057 Sheridan road, better known as Mabel Sykes, photographer, yesterday bought it for $30,000, subject to a $15,000 mortgage, through Harold Bradley & Co., and will move in about May 1 when Mr. Jelke treks northward to "3400 Sheridan road."

Miss Sykes plans converting the magnificent billiard room in her new home into a studio de luxe to be used exclusively for registering the charms of the Gold Coast beauties. She will continue her loop studio.

Mr. Jelke bought a site on the Lake Shore drive north of Lincoln park a few years ago and planned moving his La Salle street house to it. The park commissioners refused to let him cross the park and the plan was abandoned. He had estimated the move would cost $50,000.
